15. (4–k) Provincial Finance. The provincial revenues must be under the exclusive control of the local Government. Even here an irreducible minimum of expenditure must be fixed for preserving law and order, and the cost incurred must be reserved as nonvotable. The other items of expenditure which the Government may have to incur must be votable and subject to the control of the Legislature. Again, in the control of the provincial funds it must be so arranged that no department should get surplus income, and that no department should be exploited to find funds for deficits in other departments. Each department must be made self-supporting, and every department which earns an income must be so reconstituted as to ensure greater efficiency and serviceability to the public.

16. (10–d) Provincial Public Services Commissions. Provincial Public Services Commissions must be constituted of full-time salaried officials, with powers to co-opt the heads of departments wherever necessary, who will be responsible for recruitment for public services and advancement of public servants. Only then, will the public services be above the reach of nepotism.

17. II. Growth of Education. My views on the policy that must govern the growth of education are embodied in the appended address which I delivered while presiding over the Tamil University Conference on 23rd January, 1926.*

Memorandum submitted by the Madras Landholders' Association.

The Madras Landholders' Association, representing the landed aristocracy of this Presidency, begs leave to offer you its most hearty welcome on your visit to this country charged with a most momentous task. The Association rejoices that it is afforded an opportunity to give expression to its profound loyalty and attachment to the Throne.

The Association is deeply grateful to His Majesty's Government for the declaration of policy made in August, 1917, regarding the goal of British administration in India and it earnestly hopes that the result of the Commission's labours will help to remove the defects in the existing constitution and to hasten the attainment of the ideal set forth in the above declaration.

On behalf of the Zamindars of this Presidency the Association begs to submit herewith a few proposals in regard to the Indian Constitution, which, if carried, will promote the contentment of a large class of His Majesty's most loyal subjects and strengthen the bonds of union between India and England.

CHANGES PROPOSED IN THE INDIAN CONSTITUTION.

1. That in any Cabinet that may be constituted in Provincial Governments under the proposed reforms there shall be at least one member to represent the Zamindari interest.

2. That in view of the large stake which the Zamindars have in the country they shall be given the power to return to the Provincial Legislative Councils at least one-tenth of the total number of elected members on them.

3. That it is necessary and desirable to extend the term of the Provincial Legislatures and of the Legislative Assembly to a period of five years.

4. (a) That in the revision of the Indian Constitution provision shall be made for the creation of Second Chambers in all provinces recruited mainly from the landed aristocracy and leaders of commerce and industry and from persons of status, experience and mature judgment.

(b) That the duration of the Second Chambers shall be seven years.

(c) That all Zamindars in a province holding estates under the Sanad-i-milkiyat-i-istimrar and paying an annual peishcush of not less than Rs. 50,000 shall on their attaining the age of 25 become life members of the Chamber of the province.

(d) That instead of the whole Chamber coming into existence at one time and dissolving simultaneously there should be a provision for its partial renewal every four years.

(e) That the relations between the two Houses shall be similar to those now obtaining between the two Houses of the British Parliament.

5. (a) That the Council of State be reconstituted on lines similar to those of the Provincial Second Chambers.

(b) That Zamindars who are life members in each of the Second Chambers in the various provinces shall have the right to elect one member to the Council of State to represent their interest.

6. That, in view of the special rights and privileges which the Zamindars enjoy under the Sanad-i-milkiyat-i-istimrar, provision shall be made for their separate representation apart from other landholders on the Legislative Assembly and that the number of seats allotted to them on it shall be commensurate with the stake they have in the country.

7. That no legislation which will infringe or destroy the fundamental rights of Zamindars under the Sanad-i-milkiyat-i-istimrar shall be enacted by Provincial or Central Legislatures if a majority of the members representing their interest on such Legislatures oppose it.

8. That the recommendation of the Indian Sandhurst Committee for the augmentation of the King's Commissions in the Army and the establishment of a military college in India for the training of Indian officers be given effect to as early as possible.

Maharajah of Venkatagiri,
President, Madras Landholders' Association.

Memorandum submitted by the Burma Chamber of Commerce.

INTRODUCTION.

1. As a preface to this Chamber's representations to your Commission, it is thought desirable to acquaint you with the origin and composition of this Chamber, in order that your Commission may be able to know what weight to give to the opinions which are expressed herein. The Burma Chamber of Commerce first came into being in its present form in 1877, as an Association of wholesale Merchants, Millers, Banks, and others engaged in the commerce of Burma. It has preserved that character to this day, and all the important commercial houses including the Exchange Banks, the Rangoon Port Trust, the Burma Railways Co., Ltd., the Irrawaddy Flotilla Co., Ltd., the Agents of the Steamship Companies serving Burma, and the important Rice, Oil, Mining and Timber Companies, are Members of the Burma Chamber of Commerce. The Chamber is therefore fully representative of the European commercial community of Burma.

2. It is also considered desirable to define the attitude of this Chamber towards the problems confronting your Commission. The Chamber takes a purely commercial point of view, in so far as it is possible to separate commerce from politics. Its desire is peace and good government, progressive development of Burma's resources, and an atmosphere of friendly co-operation between all the various communities in Burma, in which the normal trade and commerce of the country can be carried on without undue State interference and without discrimination in favour of any section of the people. It follows that this Chamber relies on your Commission to recommend a form of government for Burma which will content the people of the country, and which will yet contain adequate safeguards for the preservation of internal peace and for the protection of all commercial interests. It also follows that this Chamber hopes for such a distribution of the revenues arising in and from Burma that, whilst Burma, so long as she remains a Province of India, shall bear her fair share of the expenses of the Central Government, she shall be left with sufficient revenue for the orderly and efficient conduct of her internal government and for the full development of her potential resources. It is contended, as will be shown later, that for many years the distribution of the revenues of Burma, as between the Central and the Provincial Governments has been inequitable to Burma, and that in other directions Burma's relationship with India has operated adversely to the former.

THE RELATIONS BETWEEN BURMA AND INDIA.

3. To a commercial body, the price which has to be paid for good government is of great importance, and no apology is therefore necessary for dealing first of all with the question of finance. As has already been stated, it has long been maintained that the distribution of the revenues of Burma, as between the Central and Provincial Governments, has been inequitable to Burma. There is a strong feeling that India derives from Burma a greater revenue than the services rendered to the Province warrant. The Central Government has been asked on many occasions to clear up the matter by publishing statistics to prove or disprove the accusation, but has always pleaded inability to do so.

4. The subject came into special prominence in 1925, when the Government of Burma prepared statements showing, as far as could be ascertained from the Finance and Revenue Accounts of the Government of India, and from other official sources, the Central Revenue derived from Burma and the expenses of the Central Government in and on behalf of Burma. The revenue for the year 1923–24 was Rs. 9·75 crores, and the expenditure Rs. 2·75 crores. These statements were submitted to the Central Government with a request for its agreement before their presentation to the Provincial Council, but the request met with a refusal on the ground of difficulty in allocating to the various provinces a proper share of Home transactions and of the transactions relating to the Commercial Departments, the Military Department, overhead charges and the unproductive public debt. This ground the Burma Chamber of Commerce cannot accept as adequate, and finds it impossible to believe that, given the will to do so, the financial experts of the Government of India are unable to give the figures for which it has been asked; that they have so far failed to do so can only be construed as a tacit admission that the result of their investigations would corroborate the figures compiled by the Government of Burma.

5. The figures for 1923–24 showed a balance remaining in the hands of the Government of India of approximately Rs. 7 crores. This Chamber has compared with these figures the published accounts for 1926–27, and although the Provincial contribution of Rs. 64 lakhs has now been remitted, the accounts show that the balance has risen to over Rs. 8 crores, of which large sum only a part can rightly be considered as a fair contribution from Burma towards the amortisation of the unproductive public debt of India, and to the upkeep of military reserves.

6. Public opinion in Burma considers that a great part of this annual sum of Rs. 8 crores is being diverted by the Government of India to purposes with which Burma has little concern, and from which she derives little or no benefit. It is this belief, with other factors, which has led to the serious consideration of the question of Separation from India, and for that reason this Chamber asked your Commission, in its letter of the 19th May, 1928, either to appoint a Committee of independent financial experts to examine, as early as possible, the financial relations between India and Burma, or to request the Government of India to supply the figures, for which they have been asked, showing how the revenues derived from Burma are expended.

7. The importance of ascertaining the truth of the matter is intensified by the present unsatisfactory state of the finances of Burma. After the Great War the Local Government was successful in obtaining the transfer from the Central Funds of the Rice Control Profits, amounting to some Rs. 9 crores in 1921. Some Rs. 3½ crores of this were used to pay off borrowings which the Local Government had made from the Government of India. The balance has been expended partly in granting loans to local bodies, but for the most part in meeting expenditure in excess of normal Revenue. Every year since 1921–22 there has been a greater or less deficit in the Revenues. The greater part of the Local Government's constructive programme for the past seven years, in roads, buildings and irrigation, has been financed from the Rice Control Profits, and now that this source has been exhausted the Local Government has had to borrow from India. During the financial year 1927–28 it borrowed Rs. 75 lakhs, and this year it is borrowing Rs. 1½ crores. A very careful review of the finances of Burma, from 1921–22 to 1926–27, is contained in the Appropriation Accounts of the Government of Burma for 1926–27, pages 30 to 49, and a perusal of this review shows that Burma, which has always been far behind the rest of India in respect of communications and public works, will be compelled by financial stringency to curtail its programme of development at an early date.

8. In spite of the improvement which the Government of Burma have, by means of the Rice Control Profits, been able to effect, the country is still only in the early stage of its development. Its chief lack is communications. The country is very poorly equipped with roads, and most inadequately with railway mileage. The total area of Burma, excluding the Federated Shan States, is approximately 168,600 square miles, and she possesses, according to the latest available figures, only 1,920 miles of railway track, excluding sidings; 1,925 miles of metalled roads, and 7,388 miles of unmetalled and unbridged roads, the very great majority of which are only village cart tracks or bridle paths. The figures for 1912, taken from a letter from the Revenue Secretary to the Government of Burma, to the Chairman of this Chamber, dated the 11th March, 1912, were 1,527 miles of railway track, 1,673 miles of metalled roads and 5,497 miles of unmetalled and unbridged roads. Thus, in sixteen years, Burma's railway track mileage has been increased by less than 400 miles, her metalled roads by 252 miles and her unmetalled and unbridged roads by 1,891 miles. The lack of roads and railways in Burma is to some extent compensated over a portion of the country by water communication, but there are large areas in which water communication is not available, and, even where it exists, it requires to be maintained, and to be supplemented by roads. Moreover, though Burma is being increasingly invaded by the water hyacinth, which is spreading extremely quickly to the detriment of its water-ways, up to a point where they cease to be navigable, the Government of Burma state they are unable, by reason of lack of funds, to undertake the eradication of the pest, or even to check its growth.

9. The stringency in the finances of Burma must also restrict its expenditure in other directions. Of these, perhaps the most important to the economic prosperity of so predominantly agricultural a country as Burma is the expenditure on the Agricultural Department. Burma's staple crop is rice, and she is gradually losing her footing in the markets which she has so far held, by reason of competition from other rice-growing countries, amongst which may be mentioned Siam, French Indo-China, Java, Spain, and Italy. This competition has led to a considerable fall in the prices obtainable for Burma rice, and the country is consequently suffering from economic depression at the present time. To restore the balance, three things are necessary, namely, an improvement in the quality of Burma rice, an increase in the yield per acre, and a decrease in the mortality of draught cattle. The Agricultural Department of the Government of Burma is doing its utmost with the funds at its disposal to effect these improvements, by means of the propagation of improved strains of paddy and the distribution of seed of these improved strains, but the veterinary assistance for the cultivator is, as yet, wholly inadequate. To effect any really general improvement such as would have an appreciable effect upon the return which Burma obtains for her exportable surplus of rice, the Agricultural Department needs more funds which the Government of Burma are not now in a position to give.

10. Enough has been said to show the extreme importance to the development and prosperity of Burma—and consequently to her internal peace and good order—of a readjustment more favourable to her of financial relations with the Central Government.

THE RELATIONS BETWEEN BURMA AND INDIA.

(B) Customs and the protection of Indian Industries.

11. Apart from the question of the expenditure of the revenue, which this Chamber, until the contrary is proved, must continue to believe operates very greatly to the advantage of India, Burma, essentially a non-manufacturing country, is compelled to participate in a protective fiscal policy from which she derives no apparent advantage. Thus, though Burma has no Steel Industry, her other industries have to pay a protective duty for the benefit of the Indian Steel Industry; Burma has no tanning industry, and whilst her Export trade in Hides and Skins is crippled by the Export Duty, she has for years appealed in vain for relief, because the duty operates to the benefit of the tanneries in Madras and the United Provinces.

12. Again, although Burma pays practically the whole of the Central revenue derived from the Rice Export Duty—and indeed, since India, if it did not import rice from Burma, would have no exportable surplus, it may be said that Burma pays the whole amount of the revenue from this source—and although the duty falls entirely upon the producer, since competition from other rice exporting countries is so strong, Burma gains no individual advantage from this Duty, and has so far not been able to persuade the Government of India to remove it.

13. At the present time, there is before the Central Legislature a measure to reserve the Coastal Traffic of India to Indian owned vessels. The Burmese are not a sea-going race, and lack sufficient capital to run steamship lines; whatever benefit this measure, if it is ever passed into law, may confer upon Indians, it is certain that Burma will gain no advantage and it is strongly apprehended that the country would suffer serious disadvantages from this and from other restrictive measures.

THE RELATIONS BETWEEN BURMA AND INDIA.

(C) Political.

14. The cases cited above are sufficient to show how the interests of Burma are unduly subordinated to those of India. This is largely due to the ignorance concerning Burma and consequent lack of interest in her affairs prevailing among Indians on the other side of the Bay of Bengal, and against this Burma, with her insignificant representation in the Central Legislature, is unable effectively to contend. This ignorance and lack of interest is in a great measure due to the geographical position of Burma. To the inhabitants of India, Burma is a distant country across the sea, not to be thought of in the same light as even Assam. Since Burma's representation in the Central Legislature is about 3½%—5 seats out of 144 in the Assembly and 2 out of 59 in the Council of State—there is little hope of the country securing adequate attention to its interests, and no hope at all if its interests clash with those of India. The Burma Chamber of Commerce therefore regards with profound apprehension the future of Burma if left largely in the hands of an unsympathetic Indian Administration.

THE RELATIONS BETWEEN BURMA AND INDIA.

(D) Burma and India's Problems.

15. The political situation in India is complicated by various problems which do not arise in Burma. The foremost amongst these are:—(1) Hindu-Moslem discord, (2) caste and other distinctions, (3) the Indian States.

16. It is an accepted fact that the dissensions between the two great religions of India have been aggravated by the degree of self-government which has already been granted. Neither party can trust the other to use its power impartially and each is apprehensive that any further advance in self-government will lead to a disturbance of the balance of power in favour of the other. Such an atmosphere of discord and suspicion must necessarily influence the future course of India's political progress. Amongst the indigenous inhabitants of Burma there are no such religious differences, and there is no reason why they should be a factor governing Burma's political development.

17. Caste and other distinctions do not exist amongst the indigenous population of Burma, there are no marked social differences and the question of untouchability does not arise. Wealth is more evenly distributed than in India and there is much less difference between the standard of living of the rich and of the poor.

18. In Burma the proportion of literates is very much higher than in India, and there is therefore hope of developing at an earlier date than in India an intelligent and widespread electorate. On the other hand, the standard of advanced education amongst the Burman population is lower than that in India, and there are few, if any, Burmans qualified to hold the high Government posts which, in India, are filled with some degree of distinction by highly educated Indians. It will be seen therefore, that Burma has a peculiar problem of her own, for she has the advantage of a potential electorate more widely spread and more representative than that in most of the Indian Provinces, and she is from that point of view better fitted for the democratic form of Government which is the ultimate object of the Reforms. It is therefore necessary to devise some form of government which is representative of the people as a whole, and which at the same time will preserve efficiency in the Public Services.

19. It seems clear that in any future constitution for India, the relationship between British India and the Indian States will play an important part, and it may be presumed that any powers which may be granted to the Provincial and Central Governments will, to some extent, be circumscribed by the obligations of the British Crown to the Indian Princes. It appears likely, moreover, that the Indian States will demand some say in the regulation of such matters as currency and exchange, ports, customs and communications, by which they are more or less directly affected, and that they may expect some share in the revenues derived from such sources. The relations with the Indian States are, however, a problem entirely foreign to Burma and there seems to be no reason why they should affect her, either politically or financially.

THE RELATIONS BETWEEN BURMA AND INDIA.

(E) The future, and the question of Separation.

20. The peace and prosperity of the country depend largely upon the removal of the disabilities which have been set out above, namely, internal financial stringency and retarded development resulting from the diversion of the country's revenues to the Central Exchequer, enforced participation in a protective policy which does not benefit Burma at all and the subordination of her interests to those of the Indian Provinces. If your Commission can find means of removing these disabilities whilst Burma remains a part of the Indian Empire, commercial opinion, at least, will be satisfied. But in case it is not found possible, this Chamber can see no alternative but to press for the Separation of Burma from India, an alternative which a section of the Commercial Community already favours.

THE FUTURE CONSTITUTION OF BURMA.

21. Owing to its lack of knowledge of the inside working of the reformed Constitution and of the difficulties which have been encountered, this Chamber does not feel itself competent to express in more than very general terms its views as to the direction which further modification of the Constitution should take. This may be more suitably left to officers who have worked the Reforms in the Secretariat and seen their effects on the administration in the Districts.

22. As has already been pointed out, the social fabric of Burma is peculiarly democratic, and at the same time there is a dearth of able politicians amongst the Burman and other indigenous elements of the population. It is therefore essential that whatever the form of government that may be introduced, it should be as simple as possible, and for this reason the Burma Chamber is unable to recommend for Burma the form of Local Government which the Associated Chambers of Commerce of India and Ceylon are recommending for the Provinces of India, namely, an Executive Council and Upper and Lower Houses of Representatives.

23. The scarcity of experienced leaders among the ranks of local politicians further leads this Chamber to view with some concern the proposal to eliminate entirely from the Provincial Legislatures the official element. At least, so far as Finance is concerned, it is regarded as highly unlikely that any Burman could be found sufficiently qualified to undertake the portfolio without official assistance.

24. The Chamber also regards with dismay the suggestion put forward by the Associated Chambers that the administration of Law and Order and Police should be handed over to Ministers responsible to the Provincial Legislatures, even with the safeguards against a breakdown of the administration by which this suggestion is qualified. The crime record of Burma is notorious and even under the present regime there is so little indication of improvement that any reduction of the British element would be fraught with danger. The Police has been a favourite subject of attack in the Provincial Council, and the position of those responsible for the preservation of Law and Order, if placed under the control of the Legislature, might be rendered untenable by personal attacks and refusal of supply.

25. The Chamber also considers it essential that the British element in the Services should not be reduced below the limits laid down by the Lee Commission, since the stability of the administration and the efficiency of the Services depend largely upon the presence and the steadying influence of this element. Those already in the Services should be encouraged to remain, and recruitment should be stimulated, by the assurance of fair treatment and of protection against unwarranted attacks in the Legislature.

26. As regards the Franchise and the qualifications for Membership of the Legislature, the Chamber has no detailed recommendations to make, but the protection of minorities and special interests by the reservation of seats as at present is considered essential, and the question of indirect election appears worthy of investigation.

SAFEGUARDS IN THE CONSTITUTION OF INDIA AND BURMA.

27. Whatever constitution may be introduced for India and Burma or for a separated Burma, this Chamber is unanimous with the Associated Chambers of Commerce of India and Ceylon in insisting that it must provide for a strong Central Government and for definite and adequate safeguards against discrimination in any form, on grounds of race or religion. Already Burman politicians have passed legislation (which, however, subsequently failed to receive the assent of the Governor-General in Council) of which the result would have been to restrict the immigration into Burma of the Indian labour upon which the prosperity of the country largely depends. Any measure of this description should be excluded by provisions in the Constitution. Another form of discrimination against which definite provision is essential, is the reservation to any one section of the community of the right to carry on any particular form of commercial activity, whether it be to develop minerals or to run inland steamer services or to engage in the Coastal trade, etc. Constitutional safeguards against discrimination of this nature are essential to the preservation of the credit of the country, for the argument cannot yet be put forward that Burma is able to develop her potential resources without the aid of external capital, whether it be in the way of loans or of non-indigenous companies. Yet another form of discrimination which has been attempted is the restriction of employment in Government service to Burman Buddhists. Government services must be open on equal terms to every class, race and creed of the domiciled community.

CONCLUSION.

28. Finally, this Chamber desires to repeat that in making these recommendations it is influenced solely by its desire for peace, prosperity and good government in Burma. It does not ask for British Commerce and any special privileges, at the same time it claims protection for the legitimate interests which its Members have built up and developed by their enterprise and capital. It hopes to see the country so developed that the greatest benefit may be derived by all from its natural resources, and the political aspirations of the people fulfilled to the utmost degree compatible with the safety of commercial interests.

Memorandum submitted by the Association of Professional and Business Men in Burma.

1. This Association being but newly formed, some apology seems necessary for the submission of a Memorandum to your Commission. Except perhaps among the Burmese and Indian Communities, the ordinary professional or business man in Burma takes little part in the political activities of the Province, and it was only when the impending arrival of your Commission in Rangoon raised in an acute form the question of what representations were to be made to you that it was realised that the views of a not unimportant section of the community were not to be placed before you in an adequate manner, if at all. Professional and business men and other non-officials of moderate opinion were not organised and such bodies as existed were concerned solely with the presentation of the particular aspects of the case which affected their own special interests.

2. The political situation in Burma and local conditions alike differ in many important respects from those obtaining in the Provinces of India and it was felt that, unless representations were made on behalf of that section of the community which regards a Government firm in the administration of law and order as the first essential towards the peace and prosperity of the Province, there was some danger that your Commission might leave Burma under the impression that there was no opposition to the demands of professional politicians who clamour for immediate Responsible Government in the nature of Home Rule.

3. Business and professional men of moderate views and in particular members of the European community, have felt that there was a danger of their views not being adequately represented owing to the fact that the Burma Chamber of Commerce admittedly takes a purely commercial point of view, in so far as it is possible to separate commerce from politics, and to the absence of any other organisation to represent them.

4. These considerations have led to the formation of this Association with the object of laying before your Commission reasons which convince its members that, so far as Burma is concerned, the stage has not yet been reached when a political advance can be made even as far as a constitution on the lines of that now proposed for the Colony of Ceylon. The Association includes in its ranks many who, by reason of their profession, have had an opportunity of observing the working of the 1922 Reforms and the readiness of the people for a further advance.

Historical.

5. To appreciate fully present conditions and the stage of development at which the country and its people have arrived, it first seems necessary to make a brief survey of the History of Burma during the last century.

6. In comparison with India, the British have ruled Burma for a short period only. This point is apt to be overlooked by reason of the fact that Burma is a Province of the Indian Empire. It is, however, only a recent acquisition of the Empire, and it was not until the First Burmese War in 1824 that England obtained a footing in the country. Even then only the maritime divisions of Arakan and Tenasserim were annexed and the independent kingdom of Burma was, as a whole, left untouched.

The Second Burmese War occurred in 1852, and resulted in further annexations which brought within British control the whole of what is now known as Lower Burma. Upper Burma still remained independent.

It was not until 1885 that the Third Burmese War was fought and Upper Burma annexed, but the actual pacification of the country was not completed until some years later.

7. It will be noted that each one of these three wars was brought about by the overbearing conduct of the Burmese, their total disregard for the customs, laws and even common civilities prevailing amongst other nations, and by deliberate outrages upon the subjects of a friendly power.

8. Until little more than forty years ago a great portion of the Province was independent. Its ruler was a monarch with absolute powers, and that he made full and arbitrary use of these powers is a matter beyond dispute. Consequently, the history of the Kings of Burma is a long chronicle of palace intrigues, oppression and wanton massacre. With little intermission, this state of affairs continued until the deposition of King Thibaw in 1885, and for the present purpose and by way of example, it will be sufficient to refer to a very few incidents which occurred in the closing years of the period.

9. When Thibaw came to the throne he secured his position by a wholesale slaughter of his half brothers and other near relations. This was in 1879, and on that occasion between seventy and eighty persons were put to death. The affair was entirely in accordance with tradition and was regarded as a perfectly legitimate method of protecting the Crown.

Again, in 1884, there was a further massacre in Mandalay, when between 200 and 300 persons, including many women and children of rank, were shot or cut down. This atrocious act was due to fear of a supposed intrigue to place upon the throne the Myingun Prince and, to facilitate the matter, a pretended jail escape was staged.

10. Of insults and oppression to non-Burmans there were innumerable instances, and these ranged from ill-treatment of humble Indian dhobies to the case of a Rangoon merchant, who was compelled to go down on his knees by convict lictors whilst the Hpaung Wun, one of the leading spirits of the massacres, went by on his elephant. And when it is remembered that the Burmese had no hereditary aristocracy, that the humble cultivator of to-day might be the Court favourite of to-morrow, it becomes evident that men of the most varied origin, as soon as they became vested with authority, were responsible for acts of this kind.

The official history of this period, although brief, is distinctly illuminating. It is contained in the Gazetteer of Upper Burma, compiled by Sir George Scott, C.I.E.

11. Undoubtedly British Rule has altered all this, but this Rule has been bureaucratic in form and one in which the general population had no part, and whether it has yet had time to effect a profound change in the character of the Burman is open to question. With the spread of education there has grown up in a few towns a class of cultured and thinking Burmans, men who are entitled to a fair share in the responsible Government of the country. But it is the labouring classes and the cultivators who go to make up by far the larger portion of the nation.

The idea of self-government or, indeed, of any form of representative government, is entirely alien to their traditions and upbringing. And this is just as much true of the period of British occupation as it was of the earlier days of the independent kingdom. Until a very few years ago the Burman was content to leave the entire direction of affairs in the hands of his rulers; in fact, he did not even know of any other form of government.

12. It must be noted, too, that the average Burman, though not altogether illiterate, is ignorant, and the administration reports show that he is lacking in self-restraint and is of a credulous disposition. Consequently he is easily led or misled. Such being the case, the normal process of educating him politically should have been gradual and progressive.

Instead, a very considerable measure of responsible government has been thrust upon him without any real attempt having been made to prepare him for it and without any real demand for Reforms having been made.

13. In 1923 the Burma Rural Self-Government Act came into force and the District Councils created by the Act began to function. Prior to this, the only experience of the Province in self-government was the very limited one gained in the working of Municipal Committees. The Act is unquestionably admirable in its objects, although even its scope is possibly too extended as a first measure of representative government.

Certainly, until its working was fully understood and appreciated by the people of the country, no further general advance should have been made. That it is not yet a success will probably be admitted by the Local Government; and it is criticised later in this Memorandum.

14. However, the Government of India Act had in the meantime conferred a further measure of self-government upon the Province although, as far as can be judged, prematurely. The uneducated mass of the people was not ready for it. But this Association is prepared to admit that it will now be difficult, if not impossible, to withdraw the rights that have already been given; and with one or two reservations is prepared to accept the present position.

RURAL SELF-GOVERNMENT.

15. This is a subject upon which the Local Government itself is in the best position to speak; but there are certain facts disclosed in the Annual Reviews of the reports of the working of District Councils and of Deputy Commissioners' Local Funds which cannot escape comment. The Reviews to which detailed reference is made in this note are those for the two years 1925–26 and 1926–27. These Reviews are the latest available.

16. The Burma Rural Self-Government Act, a most important although experimental measure, provides for the establishment of District Councils with School Boards and Hospital Committees. The Councils have wide powers in regard to domestic matters such as education, public health, etc. Subordinate to District Councils are Circle Boards (which elect the District Councils) and subordinate again to the Circle Boards are Village Committees.

Circle Boards are elected by popular vote; but it appears to be a grave defect in the Act that it does not definitely lay down the business to be transacted by Circle Boards and Village Committees and merely provides that in each case they shall carry out such functions as are delegated to them by the bodies to which they are subordinate. The result is that

> " decentralisation of Local Government business
> " has not yet proceeded as far as the Circle
> " Boards. The Circle Boards generally have them> " selves no functions except electing the District
> " Council and members of Hospital Committees
> " and drawing travelling allowance for attending
> " meetings and could transfer no business to > " the Village Committees." (Paragraph 8, Review for 1925–26.)

It may be this lack of interest and consequent lack of interest in the work of Circle Boards that caused a complete disregard on the part of the public of the general election of members in 1925.

> " Returns showing the total number of electors
> " of all the constituencies are not available, but > " if the total electorate was in proportion to the > " number of electors in the contested groups of > " Village tracts (i.e., if the total electorate was > " about 1,716,000) scarcely 6 per cent. of the
> " total electorate had the benefit of the experi> " ence of voting in the elections." (Paragraph 16, Review for 1925–26).

Small wonder that after the elections the Local Government had to fill by nomination five hundred and seventy-five vacancies in the cases of village tracts which had failed to elect members! Another reason put forward by the Local Government to account for the lack of public interest is that " local "bodies do not exercise the most effective of all " powers for arousing interest in elections, the power " of annually fixing the amount of Taxation."

17. Even after due allowance has been made for the inexperience of the new District Councils, it must be admitted that the Annual Reviews make sad reading. In 1925–26, only two of the twenty-two Councils reported on were found to have maintained " Fairly satisfactory " accounts, and affairs were very little better with School Boards and Hospital Committees.

For 1926–27 the position was somewhat worse, for none of the fifteen Councils reported upon were classified higher than " Not satisfactory," whilst out of a total of 104 District, Circle, School Board and other boards audited, only four were found " Satisfactory," fifteen " Fairly satisfactory," and the remainder were " Not satisfactory " or worse.

18. In addition, the Reviews for 1925–26 (paras. 36 and 37) and 1926–27 (paras. 6 (iii) and 46) set out an unpleasantly long list of frauds and embezzlements, including a most serious case in which the Pegu District Engineer was concerned. There are also instances of embezzlements and misappropriation of moneys by officials and of corrupt practices such as false claims for travelling allowances, substantial grants by a School Board to some of its members who were teachers, and the acceptance of high tenders for public works from untried contractors on the ground that they were Burmans and should be encouraged. To put the case no higher, these and other similar facts fully justify the reference to " general financial incompetence " made in para. 43 of the Review for 1925–26.

19. On the attitude of District Councils towards Public Health, little more is necessary than to quote two passages from the last Reviews. The following is from para. 73 of the Review for 1925–26:

> " Generally it appears that little responsibility
> " for public health is felt to rest upon the > " District Councils; and consequently little > " practical interest is shown in matters relating > " to public health in these reports, which some> " times dismiss the subject with a reference to > " the District Sanitation Report. . . . This state > " of affairs ought to be changed. No general and > " substantial improvement in public health
> " outside the Municipal towns can be expected
> " unless both the members of the rural local > " authorities and their constituents recognise
> " and respond to the responsibility of the local > " authorities in respect of public health."

And one District Council even went to the extent of abolishing the District Sanitary Staff on the ground that Village Headmen and Burmese Physicians were more competent.

> " The Commissioner, Mandalay Division, remarks
> " that there was little progress in the improve> " ment of sanitary conditions in rural areas, and
> " the Commissioner, Sagaing Division, states
> " that the general attitude of the public in > " matters of sanitation and public health are > " merely a reflection of the general attitude of > " the public in rural areas." (Review of 1926–27, para. 26).

20. In the matter of education, we again have examples of the prevailing financial incompetence in the failure to disburse teachers' salaries with regularity, although such failure was not due to want of funds. There were also cases of wide miscalculation of financial resources, and several School Boards ended the year 1925–26 with unnecessarily large balances.

21. Finally, the position with regard to Public Works is unsatisfactory, although the year 1925–26 showed a marked improvement over preceding years. At the same time, however, there was a general failure to spend the amount appropriated in the budget estimates, and eight District Councils failed to spend even the amount of the Public Works Department contribution. On the other hand, three Councils exceeded their budget appropriations by very large amounts, but in one such case the excess was due to the fraud of the District Engineer to which reference has already been made, and, taking as a whole that portion of the Review for 1925–26 which deals with Public Works, it is clear that District Councils have no realisation of the importance of maintaining roads and communications. The Review of 1926–27 refers to the fact that the Public Works Department was unable to undertake local funds work owing to a heavy programme of their own which they had to carry out during the year. Consequently, district communication suffered still further. On the other hand, it cannot be claimed that District Engineering Staffs, where they exist, have as yet functioned with any marked success.

22. This Association is of opinion that the facts touched on above reveal a state of affairs which cannot under any circumstances be deemed satisfactory. Further, it is of the opinion that until the Rural Self-Government Act is understood and appreciated by the classes for whose benefit it was introduced, it would be folly to progress any further along the path to Self-Government. There is lacking at present amongst the lower classes all sense of co-operation, public spirit and responsibility, and, until some such feeling is acquired, no good purpose can be served by the grant of further powers to the classes concerned. Furthermore, the representatives of these classes in District Councils are men whose standard of education is not high and who, amongst other drawbacks, find it difficult to think in the sums that they have now to spend. The Association puts forward the suggestion with diffidence, but it does feel that the unit upon which an educative measure such as the one under discussion could best be imposed is the village-tract. Elected Village Committees with real responsibilities and powers and the stimulation of a competitive spirit of "pride of village," would probably achieve much within a few years.

MUNICIPAL ADMINISTRATION.

23. When considering the fitness of a country for a large measure of representative government, it will not be out of place to turn to the self-governing bodies like Municipal Committees for evidence on which to base our judgment.

24. The Corporation of Rangoon affords an instructive study. Its electorate has been divided up on communal lines as is to some extent the case with the Legislative Council. It has ten Burmese Representatives, five European, four Mussulman, four Hindu and two Chinese, four representatives of Public Bodies and five nominated by Government. Rangoon has had many years of experience of Municipal Elections, enough to teach, not the responsibilities of election, but every species of electoral fraud that can be practised. The most crying evils are personation and intimidation. It frequently happens that before the poll opens the candidate in control of the Hindu coolie vote (or his agent) surrounds the entrance to the polling booth with a mob of labourers who have been instructed to keep out anyone not belonging to their own particular class. They press en masse around the entrance, and it is with difficulty that they are prevented from overthrowing the temporary structure The educated voter has no taste for a scramble with such a mob, and waits for hours, but in the end has to leave without voting. The coolies who flood the polling booth carry, each of them, a coloured card issued by the organization of one of the candidates saying that his name is so and so and his number on the register so and so. This is for the convenience of the tellers. It conceals the fraud by the ignorant coolie ; for the name on the card is not his own. When the coolie has voted, he returns for a fresh card and repeats the process.

In the Muhammadan community the same tactics are employed as in the Hindu, and it is not too much to say that there are two large employers of labour who can return any candidate who secures their good offices.

Burmans are frequently elected without contest by a system of mutual arrangement among the candidates, the voters taking no part in it. They seem to have little interest in the matter. The Chinese representatives are arranged by a few leaders without a contest. In the European community alone does an intelligent electorate come to the booths.

25. The result of all this is that while the actions of the European representatives are liable to criticism by their electorate, in the case of the other communities, no interest is taken. It is expected of their representatives that they consider the interests of their own community without any regard for the general good of the city. This obsession to communal interests is painfully apparent. For example, one section opposes regulations restricting building and the enforcement of sanitary rules because of their possible effect in diminishing the income of owners of property. Another will support every proposal to appoint a Burman or Indian to a post in municipal service, irrespective of his ability to discharge its duties.

In many cases the reason for certain candidates going to some trouble in contesting an election is obscure, for their attendance at meetings is irregular and their interest nil.

26. It is safe to say that were it not for the nominated and European members (allied constituency) together with representatives of public bodies on the Rangoon Corporation, there would be a rapid deterioration in the municipal administration of this city. The few able and conscientious non-European members would be in a hopeless minority.

27. As an example of glaring maladministration even in Rangoon, this Association would point to the now defunct Rangoon Co-operative Dairy Society, which was formed in 1925 with the object of securing a supply of pure milk for its members. It was for all practical purposes an offshoot of the Health Department, and its Chairman was a member and its Secretary an Officer of the Corporation. In spite of ample aid, both from Government and the Corporation itself, the Society became bankrupt and had to be wound up within little more than a year of its formation. The final report presented to the Corporation by the last Chairman of the Society and circulated on 11th May, 1926, discloses an amazing record of incompetence and dishonesty on the part of the Officials concerned and illustrates the readiness with which those holding positions of trust will subordinate their duties to their own personal interests.

28. The above has been written of Rangoon, but conditions outside Rangoon are no better. Amongst the large Municipal Committees such as Mandalay, Insein and Bassein, the administration has constantly called for Government intervention.

29. In the smaller municipalities things are so primitive that nothing more need be said than to emphasise the fact that the granting of any reforms at all to them has been premature.

30. This Association, whilst reluctant to commend the system of election on a communal basis, feels that the time is not yet ripe even for municipal administration to be based on the popular vote. It also feels that, if in a comparatively advanced city like that of Rangoon it is necessary to safeguard the municipal administration by certain reservations opposed to the principle of popular government, it would be suicidal to entrust the administration of the whole Province to a purely elective assembly.

THE FRANCHISE AND THE LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL.

31. Much of the criticism in this Memorandum upon Municipal Elections applies with equal force to elections held throughout the Province for the Legislative Council. In these elections, too, we have the same class of ignorant electors shepherded to the polls for the purpose of recording votes for candidates about whose merits or policies they know little and care even less. Until there has been a great educational advance this will continue to be so and every person of any experience of the Province must admit it.

32. As the franchise now stands all that is required for qualification in urban constituencies is residence and the possession of immovable property of the value of Rs 200 or the payment of Municipal or other taxes amounting to Rs 4 per annum or the occupation of a house or building of the annual rental value of Rs 60, irrespective of the fact whether the rent is paid by the elector himself or his employer. In the rural constituencies the position is analagous, and from a study of these qualifications it immediately becomes evident that the majority of the electorate must be members of the lower orders, whose knowledge of even the first principles of representative government is nil. As a result, we have in the Indian constituencies the mass voting of coolies acting solely upon the instructions of their maistries and employers; and in the Burmese constituencies we have similar mass voting or abstention from voting carried out at the instigation of hpongyis whose influence upon the ignorant classes cannot be over-estimated. And generally speaking, if pressure of some kind is not brought to bear upon the electors, most of them would undoubtedly view the elections with an apathetic indifference.

33. That the masses must be taught to realise the importance of the franchise and to appreciate it is admitted; but it would have been better if, in the first instance, this education had been confined to elections for purely local bodies. Good or evil administration in village matters would bring home to voters with much more force the effect of their voting than would some legislative enactment which emanates from Rangoon and which is not directly linked up in the minds of electors with any act of their own.

34. It follows from the foregoing that many of the elected members of the Legislative Council cannot claim to be, in the real sense of the word, representative. If they represent anything at all it is only the small party clique to which they belong and the supporters of that clique who happen to control certain unintelligent sections of the community. The professional politician who makes it his business to secure this kind of support is in considerable strength in the Council to the exclusion of better men, who do not, or cannot, avail themselves of the same methods. It must be confessed, too, that the average member of the Council is not a man of striking ability. Often he is a junior advocate or pleader in poor practice or a man who has made no particular mark in some other walk of life. He enters the Council for the purpose of getting what he can out of it more than from any real desire to further the needs of his countrymen. And experience shows that in practice it is from the ranks of such men that Ministerial appointments have to be made.

35. And here it is convenient to refer to the allegation that in Burma there is not the communal antagonism which exists in India. This, is not entirely correct for we have the frequently reiterated cry, "Burma for the Burmans." This comes, in great part, from the type of member to whom reference has just been made.

In theory, at all events, any elected member of the Council is entitled to hold office as a Minister, but in Burma a very definite line of distinction has been drawn, and certain appointments can only be explained on the ground that the claims of non-Burmans have been deliberately ignored. This Association is prepared to accept the position that it may be impracticable to nominate a European member to a Ministerial post, but it considers that the exclusion of members of other communities merely because they happen to be non-Burman is unjustifiable. Efficiency has been sacrificed to expediency, and it is extremely doubtful if this policy of exclusion of non-Burmans will have any effect other than to antagonise communities and to confirm Burmans in the belief that they alone are entitled to office irrespective of merit.

And it may be added that this policy of exclusion of non-Burmans is not confined to political posts alone but has in recent years been applied to appointments in Government Service generally, with detrimental effect to efficiency as a whole.

36. The view of this Association is that the existing electoral qualifications are ridiculously low and if altered in no other respect should, at least, have added to them some further qualifications of an educational nature which will ensure a reasonably intelligent electorate. The Association further feels that it is regrettable that the Whyte Committee did not adopt the recommendations of the majority of responsible Government Officials to whom a questionnaire was addressed in the year 1921 and who were in favour of some measure of literacy as an electoral qualification.

CRIME AND THE ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE.

37. Burma's reputation as the most criminal Province in the Empire is now notorious, and the latest Reports of the Government on Police Administration and the Administration of Criminal Justice show little subsidence of the wave of lawlessness which swept the country in the years immediately succeeding the War. Returns show that in 1926 the total number of criminal cases brought before the Courts reached the stupendous figure of 134,109, which means that one person in every hundred in Burma was brought before the Courts on a Criminal charge.

38. The figures for crimes with violence are a particularly disturbing feature of the reports. In 1926 the number of cases of murder classified by the police as true, was 867. In 1927 the figure was 825, and the Tharrawaddy district, with an area of some 2,863 square miles and a population of less than half a million, had more than half the number of cases in the whole of England and Scotland. This Association considers it worthy of remark that the lives of Europeans seem no longer to be safe from murderous attack, and, following a particularly brutal murder of a European and an Anglo-Indian lady on the outskirts of Rangoon in 1926, which the police seemed utterly unable to clear up, there were four murders of Europeans in the Province during the year 1927.

Of other crimes of violence dealt with by the police in the year 1927, the most numerous were dacoities and robberies which totalled, including attempts, 443 and 264 cases respectively, figures which showed a gratifying decrease from those of the two preceding years.

39. Of crimes unattended with violence by far the most numerous of the cases dealt with by the Courts were charges of theft, cheating and criminal breach of trust. The figures under these three heads for the year 1927 totalled 16,486, which seems to point to a regrettably low standard of honesty among the population as a whole. This Association is reluctantly compelled to agree with the views of the District Superintendent of Police, Thaton, who has reported that the lower grades of society are encouraged to be criminal by the absolute lawlessness of many rich and influential persons, who habitually break laws and commit offences of a type non-cognizable by the police.

eventually escape the death penalty for one reason or another. Various causes contribute to the paucity of convictions, the chief being, in the opinion of this Association (1) a reluctance on the part of Courts to convict on capital charges, (2) reluctance on the part of witnesses to come forward and give evidence, (3) provisions in the Code of Criminal Procedure by the Indian Legislature hampering the work of the Police, (4) the haphazard appointment of Government prosecutors with less regard to their ability than to their nationality and race, (5) the prevalence of corruption amongst the subordinate officers of the Police, the Judicial Service, and the Magistracy. The reluctance on the part of the populace as a whole to render assistance to the Police is particularly a matter of regret, and has recently been exemplified in the case of the conspiracy in the Shwebo District to overthrow the British Government, where the disturbance lasted some months longer than it should have done owing to the villagers harbouring absconders and refusing to assist in the restoration of order. A further recent example occurred in the Meiktila district, where a notorious outlaw remained at large for eight months, during which period he committed no less than six murders. His final arrest was followed by an attempt on the part of a section of the public and the press to turn him into a national hero.

41. This Association is convinced that until public opinion is more active in support of law and order any extension of popular Government or any measures tending to a loss of efficiency in the Police and the Administration of Justice will only result in a further wave of criminality, not only detrimental to the prosperity of the Province as a whole, but even endangering the ordinary safeguards to life and property for which every Government is responsible.

PUBLIC FUNDS.

42. This is a subject intimately connected with the working of every department of the Administration, whether local, provincial or central, and an endeavour will be made to show how far subordinate officials appreciate the necessity of conforming to a normal standard of integrity and the duty of keeping proper accounts of whatever fund they may be administering.

43. The following observations are taken from the Annual Report on the working of the Local Fund Audit Department in Burma for the year 1926–27.

> "Serious defects and irregularities are brought "out in audit notes year by year. No proper "attention is paid to audit objections. Replies "by Local Secretaries seem to have been "accepted by the Chief Executive Officers of "the Fund concerned without any attempt to "verify the accuracy of the replies. Fund Officers "are not inclined to take action when a case "of fraud or loss of revenue is reported. The "necessary deterrent action is not taken."

Here the remarks of one of the Judges of the High Court in the Pegu laterite case may not be out of place. His Lordship's observations were to this effect :—

> "The sentences were undoubtedly severe, but "in view of the fraud committed, involving "large sums of public money, an exemplary "punishment was called for. It was not long "ago that reforms were introduced in Burma "and steps taken to teach the people Self-"Government. Cases of corruption when detected "should be firmly put down."

44. The report also discloses that the accounts work of a Fund Office was generally brought up-to-date during audit, but with the conclusion of audit and departure of the auditor from the station the office relapsed once more into its normal state and all the account books were left to fall out of date, posting transactions being kept over till the next audit intimation was received. In some places, several registers had to be posted by the auditors before commencing audit.

This indicates that responsible officers are not alive to the obligations which their office entails and until such time as they are sufficiently educated to realise these obligations no improvement can be expected.

45. Under the heading of General Observations it is reported that administrators of funds take no notice of financial and other irregularities brought to their notice. They imagine the auditor is only retained to find fault. They do not realise that poor collection of revenue, irregular and excess payments due to their slackness, affect the finances of the funds with which they are connected and thereby reduce the efficiency of the services to be rendered to the taxpayer by that fund, the ultimate result being an increase of taxation generally which would be avoided if local administrators took an interest in their duties and were competent to perform them properly.

46. Under the heading of Concluding Remarks the Government Audit Department indicate that, under the present system, local finances are in a very unsatisfactory state.

The general local idea appears to be that if an official holds an honorary office, he is not responsible for any loss that may be incurred through his inefficiency or neglect of duty.

47. A large proportion of the funds audited have the classification "unsatisfactory" or "very unsatisfactory" against the general state of their accounts. This means serious irregularities, misappropriations, embezzlements and frauds.

48. Before leaving this topic this Association desires to refer to the result of an action of the Government in 1924 when, pursuant to a resolution of the Legislative Council but against expert advice, it endeavoured to bolster up a Spinning and Weaving Company with Burmese Capital and Management by granting it a loan of Rs15,00,000 at six per cent. interest. The loan was guaranteed to the extent of Rs. 7½ lakhs by the Directors of the Company.

At the time of the loan the Company's accounts shewed that the business was being run at a loss and the whole of the Rs15,00,000 was required to pay off an existing mortgage on the Company's assets. The business continued to be run at a loss and the proceedings of the Legislative Council of 14th February, 1927, disclose that the Company was no longer able to carry on or meet the interest on Government's loan. The proposal was made and carried that Government should take over the the Company's properties in full satisfaction of the 16½ lakhs then due for principal and interest and that (despite the objections of the Accountant-General that the proposal offended against elementary canons of financial propriety) the guarantors should be relieved of all personal liability.

The Audit reports do not disclose the further losses incurred, but eventually Government had to sell the Company's assets, suffering a heavy loss in doing so. Finance of this kind can hardly be justified even on the ground that it meets with the approval of a large section of the Legislative Council.

49. From the foregoing it is in the opinion of this Association obvious that, until such time as the Burman is educated up to a sense of his obligations and duties in a position of public responsibility, and is capable of carrying out the duties entrusted to him, any additional responsibility would only result in an aggravation of the present unsatisfactory state of local finances.

SEPARATION FROM INDIA.

50. There is a strong feeling in this Province that it should be separated from India and a large majority of members of this Association favours this view. The financial aspect of the case has been fully dealt with in the Memorandum submitted to your Commission by the Burma Chamber of Commerce and this Association desires to associate itself in general with the views on this topic therein expressed. It is possible that the demand for separation would be satisfied if the financial adjustment deemed by Burma to be fair were carried out and if, in addition, ample safeguards were found to protect Burma from Acts of the Indian Legislature unfairly discriminating against her. This Association further suggests that, in view of the reluctance of the Central Government to agree with the Local Government the expenditure of the Central Government in or on behalf of Burma, as a preliminary measure a special commission should be set up for the purpose of investigating the financial relations between this Province and India.

CONCLUSION.

51. In the foregoing notes this Association has touched upon some of the questions calling for serious consideration when the subject of the fitness or otherwise of this Province for responsible Government is studied. This Memorandum is not by any means exhaustive and only incidental references have been made to such important subjects as Education, the Provincial and subordinate Government services, the working of Municipalities other than Rangoon, and the Co-operative movement. Of the last it may be as well to remark that it has arrived at such an unsatisfactory state that a Committee has now been appointed to go into the whole question.

52. If it is at all feasible, this Association suggests that you should visit some group or groups of villages at a distance of twenty to thirty miles from Rangoon and in each village examine six or seven members of the electoral class chosen by you more or less at random. Such examination will give a truer impression of the mind of the people than would any lengthy examination of witnesses in Rangoon.

It is also strongly felt by this Association, for reasons that must be obvious, that opinions of greater value would be obtained from witnesses, both official and non-official, if those who desired it could be examined by your Commission alone and in camera.

53. Finally this Association feels strongly that the grant of full responsible government to any country or province must be preceded by the establishment of an educated public opinion, which in a flexible constitution, is the only real safeguard against the commission of acts and alterations in the constitution contrary to principles of good sense.

That such an educated public opinion does not exist among the indigenous population of Burma is a fact which cannot be questioned, and the manner in which the degree of self-government already granted has been abused shows that even these reforms are in advance of what the people of the country are at present capable of efficiently administering. In the words of one responsible officer of the Police, " The new wine of Western Civilisation is showing a tendency to burst its old bottles of Eastern make, and much red wine will be spilt before Burma has the ordered civilisation and high educational standards of England."

A healthy educated public opinion must be cultivated and the people taught to realise the privileges and obligations of citizenship. Progress towards self-government should be regulated by the progress made towards the realisation of these privileges and responsibilities, and until such realisation is attained by the majority of the population any substantial advance towards full responsible government can only result in disaster to the country and its people.

RANGOON.
4th February, 1929.
Morning.

PRESENT :

ALL THE MEMBERS OF THE COMMISSION, OF THE CENTRAL COMMITTEE (EXCEPT MR. KIKABHAI PREMCHAND), AND OF THE BURMA PROVINCIAL COMMITTEE.

Deputation from the Burma Chamber of Commerce, and Deputation from the Burma Association of Professional and Business Men.

The deputations consisted of :—

The Burma Chamber of Commerce :

Mr. W. T. HOWISON (Chairman).
Mr. B. P. CRISTALL (Secretary).
Mr. M. JOAKIM, M.L.C.
Mr. F. WROUGHTON (Spokesman).
Mr. H. PONSFORD.
Mr. A. P. BAXTER.

The Burma Association of Professional and Business Men :

Mr. W. A. DAWN (Spokesman).
Mr. A. J. DARWOOD.
Mr. E. C. V. FOUCAR.
Dr. ALLAN MURRAY.
Mr. C. N. PAGET (Secretary).

1. The Chairman : As regards the memoranda, I will start, if I may, with the Burma Chamber of Commerce, and see whether I have got the main points right, Mr. Wroughton. You first, I notice, call attention to the state of the account, as it were, between Burma and the Central Government of India, and make the point on the figures that it would appear that the Burmese contribution to Central revenues is greater than the financial benefit which Burma receives ?—(Mr. Wroughton) That is so.

2. It is in your paragraph 46, I notice. You work out figures which would suggest a very considerable balance in favour of Burma. Of course, you gentlemen will have in mind that before one could really strike a true balance, looking at it from the strictly business point of view, one would have to bring in whatever is the proper amount to allocate to Burma for a large range of general and overhead charges ?—Yes.

3. For instance, Burma has the benefit, whatever you may measure it at, of the military organisation of the Government of India. It has all the service which is centralised—services, I mean, such as audit, currency, credit, exchange, everything which goes with being associated with a great central Power ; and those are very difficult things, I imagine, even for business men to put down in crores. Again, one must remember that the frontier police is, as far as it serves on the frontier, borne on Central revenues. There are a number of elements of that sort. You may be sure that we have gone into these things as well as we could with the help of some official evidence, both evidence that was given in open conference and also in some confidential discussion. What I wanted to ask you was this : Is it the view of your Chamber that after making whatever may be the proper allowance for that, you still think that looking at it as a matter of finance, Burma gives more than it gets ?—Yes.

4. That is naturally a matter which we are all much concerned to pursue. You will appreciate that we should not be able to deal with it in detail here very usefully, especially after the official evidence, which is very striking, because we should also have to hear the Government of India's view ?—Yes.

5. I will leave that. Then the second point which you make, which is also of a financial kind, which runs from paragraph 7 to paragraph 10, is this. You say that Burma, after a struggle, got for itself the rice control profits, very substantial sums, I believe about nine crores ?—Yes.

6. Then you take the point, as I follow, that Burma has been using those rice control profits, which represented an accumulated reserve, as it were to meet a number of expenses, with the result that they have to a large extent now been used up, and indeed, Burma is now in a position where she has to raise a loan ?—Yes.

7. And that she would not be in even as good a position as she is now if she had not had that big windfall at an early stage ?—That is so.

8. You must amplify, and, still more important, correct me if you do not think I have understood your document as you think it should be understood. Then there are some most striking figures in your document about the very limited extent to which this very great country at present has got the facilities of good communications. I will just call the attention of the Conference to that. The figures are very remarkable. Look at para. 8 of the Burma Chamber of Commerce document. It gives the total area, which is enormous. It has 1,920 miles of railway track, including sidings, and 1,925 miles of metalled roads—almost exactly the same mileage. It is extraordinary in a country as big as this. Tell me this, if you would. Do the metalled roads to a large extent connect the same centres as the railway ? Do they run up the same valley ? I should think they did, looking at the map.—I could not say exactly. The new trunk road which is being put through the country follows very much the line of the railway ; the old metalled roads run down to the rivers, and there are very few of those.

9. A thing which strikes one very much in Burma, and also, I may say, in India, is the development of public motor transport along the metalled roads. If the motor transport is running along metalled roads which are more or less an alternative to the railway, it does not look as though the railway is going to gain by it ?—I believe the railway at the present time is complaining of the competition of buses along the roads.

10. We have heard something about this in England lately, of course. Still more remarkable, just below that there is the statement you make that in 1912 the railway track was about 400 miles less, and the metalled roads were about 250 miles less ; so that apparently in the interval between 1912 and to-day you have only had an extension of metalled roads of about 252 miles ?—There are very few metalled roads in the country.

11. Those that there are, as far as I have seen them, are extremely good, just outside here. And your point, I take it, is that if that is the position there must be in the near future, or there ought to be, a very substantial outlay on communications, and therefore it is the more important that Burma's finances should not be so dealt with as to starve the country ?—Yes.

12. Then you next take a point which is particularly important as coming from you. It begins at paragraph 11. I gather your view is that the position of Burma, as a place of trade, differs so much from the position of other parts of British India that the fiscal policy which is thought to be best for British India as a whole does not suit Burma ? —Yes.

13. Is that a widely held view, do you think, among the business communities here ?—Yes, I think it is generally held.

14. The instances, of course, we have heard many times ; the instance of the tariff on steel, for example, because a good deal of steel is needed here in connection with oil companies ?—Yes, and buildings and bridges.

15. Is it your view that if Burma decided its own fiscal policy, it would not keep such a tariff on imported steel ?—I do not think Burma would object to the tariff if the tariff came into our own revenues. It is paying this tariff to the Indian Central Government that is the cause of our objection.

16. I have heard a different view from some others. Then another question which is commonly given us is the export duty on hides. Would you mind explaining this to me, at the end of paragraph 11. Why does the present duty on hides operate to the benefit of the tanneries in Madras and United Provinces ?—It operates to our disadvantage by discouraging the export of hide by allowing us to pay less to the producer. I did not give the answer quite correctly. It operates to the benefit of Madras and the United Provinces by keeping the hides in the country.

17. If any of your body would explain it to me I should be quite glad. One likes to appreciate the practical business end of the point. I understand that there is an export duty on hides coming out of British India into Burma ?—No.

18. The Chairman : Does the export duty attach to a hide from Burma if it is going to British India ? That would be internal, would it not ?

Sir Hari Singh Gour : Yes.

19. The Chairman : It is only if it is exported abroad ?—Yes.

20. I can guess the reason, but I thought it would be better for you business gentlemen to state it. Why is it that Burma is prejudiced, and that Madras and the United Provinces are benefited by the duty ? Let me try this for you. I do not know whether it is any good to you. Are there any tanneries in Burma ?—No.

21. There are tanneries in Madras ?—Yes.

22. And there are tanneries in the United Provinces ?—Yes.

23. It would follow, therefore, that an export duty on hides may, for all I know, help the tanneries in Madras and in the United Provinces, and tend to reduce the price of hides inside those areas ?—Yes.

24. You have not got any tanneries to be benefited by it ; is not that the reason ?—Yes.

25. There is a second reason, I have been told ; but I want someone to tell me if it is right. Is not the ordinary Burma hide a rather smaller and less valuable thing than the average hide elsewhere ? —A very inferior hide.

26. Well, I thought in working out the duty, in theory a Burmese hide got hard hit as compared with the larger and more valuable hides of some other parts of India. Perhaps none of you gentlemen happens to be in this particular trade ?—(Mr. Joakim) We thought the duty affected the smaller sizes compared with the larger sizes. The Burma hide is a very inferior quality hide, so the duty does not come in so far as Burma is concerned in regard to the sizes. It was originally put on to help the tanning industry in Burma also, but unfortunately tanning has not been a success in Burma, so that it only helps India, and it does not help Burma.

27. Sir Arthur Froom : Are there any figures to show the export of hides as compared with the present day ?

The Chairman : Do you know whether there are any figures which will compare the export of hides from Burma before the duty was put on, and the export of hides after it has been put on ? Perhaps it would be better for us to inquire of one of the officials about that ?

The Witness (Mr. Wroughton) : Yes.

28. The next point you make is this, and I feel the force of it, if I may say so. You say Burma cannot have an effective voice in the Indian legislature, because the representatives of Burma are few, and you think the general policy of the Government of India is necessarily governed by the view of the great majority : is that right ?—Yes.

29. In your practical experience (and we want the practical experience of your Chamber and its members) do you think Burma has suffered by that ? Can you develop that for me and illustrate what you have in mind, or is it an abstract theory ?—As an example we can say that if our representations received more general support in the Indian legislature, we might have had a better chance of getting the rice export duty removed.

30. I think an obvious difficulty which cannot be denied is the mere difficulty of distance. It must be an extremely difficult thing, I should think, as a practical matter to get Burmese opinion continuously expressed in an Assembly which is such a long way off. Do you find that ?—Yes.

31. What do you do about your own representatives ? There are two business representatives, are not there, in the Central Legislature ?—One in the Legislative Assembly and one in the Council of State.

32. One in each ?—Yes.

33. How does it work out ? How are the gentlemen, in fact, chosen ?—In the Council of State we have our own representative in the person of Mr. Gray. In the Assembly we are represented by Mr. Lamb.

34. It is just because of that that I thought you would have no difficulty in telling me the answer to the question. I know it is Mr. Lamb, but as a matter of fact are there many people who want to serve ? Is there difficulty in getting a man to serve ? Does he serve a long time, or is he constantly changed ?—We do have some difficulty in getting representatives to go so far away and spend so much time, and it is only as a result of personal persuasion that we are able to get people to go.

35. The Chairman : Just what I should have thought. I imagine a gentleman going so far away must for the time being be quite away from his business interests. Has Mr. Lamb been your representative for several sessions ?

Sir Hari Singh Gour : No, they keep on changing.

36. The Chairman : Mr. Dawn, you used to be a member of the Council of State ?—(Mr. Dawn) Yes.

37. Were you the member for the Burman European seat ?—No, I was the representative of the Burma Chamber of Commerce.

38. Is that honourable office usually contested ? Do you have a keen contest ?—No, it was not contested.

39. Has it ever been contested ?—I think not.

40. I expect the difficulty is to get gentlemen of your position to go so far ?—Yes, but being on the unemployed list I was available !

41. I think you come from Moulmein, Mr. Dawn ?—Yes. I should like to add that the discomforts and the difference in atmosphere, which is not quite agreeable to Europeans, must be much more unacceptable to the Burman representatives.

42. Yes, I can quite see that. Perhaps you would not mind telling me this. I do not say this with any desire to reflect on anybody, but as a matter of fact are the Burman representatives able to be in constant attendance, or does experience go to show that whatever the reasons may be (distance, I expect, and perhaps other things) though they are elected members they are not able to be in constant attendance in Delhi ?—My experience is there was only one Burman representative who constantly attended.

43. I have had the pleasure of reading fairly thoroughly some of the volumes of the Indian Hansard. I have read the debates and discussions and a great many interesting speeches, but I have not seen a great many speeches made in the Assembly by the representatives of Burma ?—Very rarely.

44. The Chairman : You might tell me this, gentlemen of the Provincial Committee. I have the impression that here in your provincial council a good deal of discussion takes place in Burmese : is not that so ?

U Aung Thin : That is so.

45. The Chairman : I think, Mr. Dawn, that, as you told us quite frankly, the Burma Association of Professional and Business Men was formed after the visit of the Statutory Commission was announced ?—Yes.

46. And was formed for the purpose of bringing before the Conference the views of your body ?—Yes.

47. Is there anything you would like to say yourself ? Would you like to state shortly your general view ?—I think our views are given in the Memorandum.

49. There are one or two things in your Memorandum, of course, which are a little critical of the working of the present system of government, and while I do not wish to delay on them I should like to call attention to them. I notice, first of all, that on page 363 of your Memorandum your body takes the view that it has not been very easy to work the Burma Rural Self-Government Act as it was intended. You say about the middle of the page : "after the "elections the local Government had to fill by "nomination five hundred and seventy-five vacancies "in the case of village tracts which had failed to elect "members ? "—Yes.

50. I gather your point of view is that as yet there has not developed in the countryside so keen an interest in local representative institutions that people will work the machine of election ?—That is so.

51. Then you call attention to these annual reviews, from which you give extracts on page 363 which certainly do not seem to be very good reading. Then we come to municipal administration ?—Yes.

52. The Chairman : I call attention to paragraph 24. I am interested in the constitution of the Corporation of Rangoon. This is correct, is not it, Mr. Rafi ?

Mr. Rafi : Yes.

53. The Chairman : "Its electorate has been "divided up on communal lines as is to some extent "the case with the legislative council. It has 10 "Burmese representatives, 5 European, 4 Mussulman, "4 Hindu and 2 Chinese, 4 representatives of public "bodies and 5 nominated by Government."

Mr. Campagnac : The European constituency includes Armenians, Jews, Parsees and Anglo-Indians as well ; they form one constituency.

54. The Chairman : Is this by some regulation issued under the Act by the department of Local Self-Government.

Mr. Campagnac : It is under the Corporation of Rangoon Act.

55. The Chairman : A special Act ?

Mr. Campagnac : Yes.

56. The Chairman : I see. Then there is a very distressing statement on page 364. What is your authority, Mr. Dawn, for the statement there describing the way in which the election is conducted, or I should say misconducted? It is a strong description, you see, and one wants to know who vouches for it?—Dr. Murray, who has been chairman of the municipality will reply to that. (Dr. Murray) We have seen this for ourselves, and this statement, I may say, was seen by Mr. Gavin Scott, the Commissioner of the Corporation and one of the oldest officials in the country, and he considered it a fair account of what takes place at an election.

57. Is there as a rule a contest for the European seats?—Yes, there is always a close contest.

58. Taking your own case if you like, do you consider your constituents hold you to account and take an interest in the conduct of their representative in regard to the affairs of the Corporation?—Yes, I certainly think they do. There are a few, perhaps, in the constituency who do not take much interest but there is a very strong majority who take a keen interest in the contest, and also watch the work of their representatives.

59. Of course, it is an enormously important body. Then we come in your document to a number of suggestions. I gather from page 365 your view is you are not disposed to recommend a further lowering of the franchise at present?—(Mr. Dawn) That is so.

60. It is a striking thing that here in Burma the franchise as it stands admits to the vote a substantially larger proportion of citizens than it does in some parts of India, as far as I can see. That seems to be quite clear. Indeed, I think in paragraph 36 you take the view that the franchise is lower than it ought to be?—Yes.

61. You do not know, do you, of an instance in any country where the franchise has been raised from what it was before?—No, I have no experience.

62. Not in modern times, at any rate. I will not delay you on the subject of the criminal statistics. They are certainly very surprising. I see on the subject of the separation of Burma from India you and your friends associate yourselves with the view of the Burma Chamber of Commerce?—Yes, as regards the financial part of the plea.

63. I hope I have fairly summarised the outline of these two documents. Is there anything you gentlemen would like to add before others put questions?—We do not agree with part of Mr. Anderson's evidence, about corrupt practices in elections being confined to Rangoon. Moreover, we wish to say that though the document put up by our Association may appear rather severely critical, we are anything but anti-Burmese; I should like that to be quite clearly understood.

65. Have you any special reasons to give or arguments to use about that?—Our main reason is that at present the representatives in the Legislative Council are not very wise in the matters with which they deal, and we find the official element instructive for us. We are all ignorant in regard to legislation and inclined to see it from our narrow point of view, and the official element really act as our schoolmasters; without them we should, rather, be wandering in the dark.

66. In your opinion, would it be difficult to get any Government Bill properly explained without the help of the official members?—Yes.

67. And in financial matters, do you think the official element is of some use?—(Mr. Howison) Absolutely necessary.

68. I see you regard "with dismay" the suggestion of the Associated Chambers that Law and Order and Police should be put in the hands of a minister responsible to the provincial legislature?—(Mr. Wroughton) Yes.

69. And you quote all these very unpleasant figures with regard to crime. I see the Association of Professional and Business Men in Burma, on page 365 of their Memorandum, state: "The Association considers it worthy of remark that the lives "of Europeans seem no longer safe from murderous "attack," and, therefore there is no part of the population here that is free. You do not think it would be a good thing, with the want of sympathy that is said to exist with the prosecution of crime, to have the machinery rendered ineffective by being put under the Legislative Council?—Yes, that is our view.

70. Crime does not tend to decrease in Burma?—At the present moment, I believe, it is slightly down, except for the national pastime of murder. Ordinary crime (dacoities and so on) is slightly down, but murder still remains as high as ever.

71. If Law and Order (as it is popularly called) were transferred to a minister responsible to some section of the Legislative Council, how do you think it would affect the morale and discipline of the Police?—I think it would operate very badly against the morale of the Police, because they would not feel assured of the support which they require.

72. Mr. Hartshorn: Can you tell us something more definite as to your reasons for this dismay which you say you feel about the transfer of Law and Order? The present position is evidently very unsatisfactory while Law and Order is a reserved subject. What are your real reasons for thinking that things would be worse if they were placed under a minister?—(Mr. Wroughton) Because in the previous sessions attacks on the Police in the Legislative Council seem to have been entirely irresponsible. They have just been blind attacks, apparently having no sound motive at the back of them. It has not been confined to pure criticism.

73. Do you think those irresponsible attacks, as you call them, have been directed to the police or to the Government? Do not you think the fact that the Legislative Council and the ministers are not responsible in itself tends towards irresponsibility on the part of the members of the Council, and do not you think that if a minister responsible to the Council were made responsible for these services, that would tend to develop responsibility among the members?—So far as we are aware unofficially, we believe that in this province Dyarchy has never been worked as Dyarchy, and that the ministers have been closely associated with the Governor and his councillors in reserved as well as transferred subjects; so that the administration of the Police and matters like that have had the most sympathetic direction.

74. Then, if that is the case, if it has been treated already as though it were a transferred subject, and the ministers and members have been jointly taking responsibility for it, what would be the difference if it were transferred?—Ministers then would be subjected to pressure from outside, in the Council.

75. Is that merely a theory, or have you any incident upon which that suspicion is based?—I cannot specify any definite incident; it is a result of experience of the Council, and a fairly long experience of the country—up-country.

76. The Chairman: Have you served on the Council yourself?—Yes, I have served on the Council.

77. Are you a member now?—I resigned two days ago.

80. Major Attlee: You say that the prevalence of crime is notorious even under the present régime. and that there is little indication of improvement, Burma has always been fairly criminal, has it not?—It always has been pretty bad, but I think it has been worse in the post-war period.

81. I gather, though, that you are rather good in certain ways. You have a very low record of riot, for instance, as compared with other provinces.

Your crime seems to be more retail than wholesale. The point I want to put to you is, do you really think that this trouble of crime in this province is going to be cured by police methods?—No, it will only be cured by education,

82. You want to have some quite different force from the mere repression of the police force to better the crime conditions?—You must have an adequate police force to keep the country quiet while you are educating them.

83. Quite; but even so, you have not got very far, have you, even with the Police force?—No.

84. Can you suggest anything at all to account for the present position of crime in this province, or any way in which it might be bettered, as you have had a long experience in the country?—No, I do not think so.

85. The Chairman: One has been told, and I want to know what you think, that the Burman is an impetuous person, and that it happens that he carries about with him an instrument which is capable, in moments of impetuosity, of doing a good deal of harm. Has that got anything to do with it?—It is his temperament, not the fact that he carries a knife.

86. Major Attlee: It has been suggested to me that a good deal of crime is due to boredom in the off-season?—I think a good deal of crime is due to the fact that the Police at the present time, for one reason or another, are not very successful in combating crime, and that if a "bad hat" can escape with impunity, he is an extraordinarily bad example to the others, and that the young are rather fascinated with the idea of being what is known as a lu-zo, a leader of the bad men. There is a good deal of sentiment about it, I think, and a good deal of conceit.

87. Colonel Lane-Fox: With regard to the line taken by the Chambers of Commerce in India about the transfer of the police, of course you realise that in the evidence given to us the opinions of the Chambers of Commerce have shown considerable divergences?—Yes.

88. But surely in this matter the Indian problem is an entirely different one from yours, because you have no communal question. Is not the difficulty in India the fear that as between one community and another the police will be administered unfairly, by a Hindu minister as against the Muhammadans, or vice versa? That trouble does not occur with you, does it?—No.

89. What you have to deal with is ordinary crime?—Yes.

90. Is there any reason why a Burman minister should not be just as anxious to stamp out crime as a European? There is no question of communal bias; it is the ordinary question of stamping out crime. A good Burman is just as anxious to stop crime as a good European?—Yes, he should be, but he is subject to much more pressure than the European would be.

91. But why should there be pressure? I quite understand there being pressure if there is a communal question, the pressure of the minister's relations and the party, and so on, but there is no party in your case that would bring pressure on a minister to encourage crime, is there? Can you explain what you mean by pressure?—I would say the difficulty lies in the fact that there is not sufficient public spirit outside against crime, and in a district the criminal in many cases is thought to be rather a hero.

92. But you do not suggest here that any particular party or group would bring pressure on a minister to encourage terrorism?—No, but the feeling, almost akin to sympathy, in favour of a criminal would make it very difficult for ministers to introduce severe measures against criminals.

93. Do you suggest that the law is not stringent enough now? The law is now being administered by a Burman member. Do you suggest that if he became a minister his position would be any different in that respect?—The law at present is being administered by the Governor in Council.

94. But if the member responsible became a minister, do you think it would be more difficult for him to carry out his duties?—I think it would.

95. Might I ask Mr. Dawn what his view would be on this point? Your position, Mr. Dawn, in Burma seems to me quite different from the Indian position. The Indian position as regards transfer of the police administration is the difficulty of securing fair play as between the two main communities which cause the principal trouble in India at this moment. That does not occur in Burma. Therefore, what is the great difficulty of transferring the administration of police to a minister in Burma?—(Mr. Dawn) May I ask Mr. Darwood to reply to that? He is much more au fait with the subject than I am. (Mr. Darwood) I think there would be a great deal of distrust if the administration of the police were transferred to a minister. The Burmans—my friends on the left will excuse me saying so—are a very large-hearted race, and also they are very charitable. If a police officer gets into any trouble he goes to somebody to whom he is subordinate, and that officer goes to somebody in a higher position, and eventually some kind of appeal is made to the minister, who is apt, I think, rather to slur over any difficulties. That is why, I think, so far as the European community is concerned, they are rather distrustful of transferring the police to a minister.

96. But that sort of influence would equally affect the present member. That is a human question. I was asking what the political pressure was that was suggested.—I do not know about the political pressure.

97. Why would the position of a minister be more difficult than that of a member?—That I am unable to answer.

98. That is the point of difference, is it not? In the one case a man is liable to political pressure from his party, or members in the council; in the other case he is not?—(Mr. Paget) May I answer that question? We have pointed out in our Memorandum that under the present system a minister is often a man of very little experience; he is a man who would naturally be more susceptible to pressure than a member appointed by the Governor. In the long run, of course, both are appointed by the Governor, but the member is naturally a man of much higher qualifications for office than a minister who has to be chosen from among the members of the present Legislative Council; and, as we say in our Memorandum, in practice from a particular class or group of members.

99. It does not require much experience to hang a man for murder, does it?—No, I do not think that is the point. We feel, from our experience of the country, that there is too much outside influence at work in cases where a criminal, for example, has friends. There is great danger that outside influence may be brought to work.

100. That, of course, equally applies to the member, does it not?—I think a member may be reasonably expected to be above such considerations.

101. Mr. Hartshorn: But is not the present member drawn from the ministers? Was not he formerly a minister?—In this case, but that is not necessarily so.

Mr. Hartshorn: Not necessarily so, I agree.

102. Colonel Lane-Fox: I want to ask one question about the statement which is made in the Memorandum of the Business Men about the Rangoon elections. I think Mr. Dawn or somebody said he did not agree that the description you have given about the elections in Rangoon is not typical of other parts of Burma. The question is, how far would you consider that this description really applies to elections throughout Burma, municipal or other?—(Mr. Dawn) Throughout the country.

103. You think they are all as bad as this?—More or less, I think, approximately.

104. Lord Strathcona: May I ask Mr. Dawn a question first of all. Would you or any member of your Association be able to give us an opinion as to whether the jury system is, in your opinion, working satisfactorily in this country?—(Mr. Darwood) If I may be allowed to speak on that subject, I should say that the jury system is not a satisfactory system.

105. I asked that question because you give, in your Business Men's document on page 366 a list of reasons why, apparently, criminals escaped conviction, particularly in murder cases; but you do not mention the jury system. I wondered whether that was one of the reasons why occasionally criminals get off?—Well, there is very little of the jury system in Burma itself, apart from Rangoon and Moulmein. The trials of criminals are by magistrates.

106. It has been suggested to me privately that the Burman on a jury is rather too kind-hearted?—I imagine that is so.

107. Would that be your opinion?—(Mr. Darwood) The Burman is notoriously averse to sentencing a man to death. We have in this country a system by which assessors sit with the sessions judges, and I should think in ninety per cent. of the cases in which the sessions judge convicts a person the assessors would acquit him.

108. The Chairman: You have acted as a district and sessions judge?—Yes.

109. So you speak with some knowledge of your own court?—Yes.

110. I am not clear how far there is actually any jury system. Take the ordinary case of a Burman who commits what is alleged to be a murder. Is he tried with the assistance of anybody?—All over Burma, except in Rangoon and Moulmein, he is tried with the assistance of assessors.

111. If I understand it rightly, though the presiding judge attends to what the assessors say (I think their view is stated publicly), he forms his own view according to what he thinks is right, after hearing their view?—Yes.

112. If you think a man should be convicted, the fact that your two assessors suggest he should be acquitted does not lessen your jurisdiction to convict him?—It does not.

113. Lord Strathcona: On the other hand, in cases where there is a jury it is a fact, is not it, that it is rather hard to get a conviction?—I have found it very difficult on occasions in cases which I had every reason to believe were perfectly true cases.

114. Do you and your body, Mr. Wroughton, more or less agree with that opinion? Is that your experience?—(Mr. Wroughton) We have really no experience. (Mr. Howison) In Rangoon we have mixed juries on which there is generally a preponderance of Europeans.

115. Mr. Cadogan: I should like to ask a question on section 27 of the Memorandum of the Burma Chamber of Commerce. You say: "Whatever "constitution may be introduced for India and "Burma or for a separated Burma, this Chamber "is unanimous with the Associated Chambers of "Commerce of India and Ceylon in insisting that it "must provide for a strong Central Government." We have had sentences of a similar character in a great number of Memoranda. I do not know whether you would be prepared to develop that expression and say what you mean by a strong Central Government? Do you suggest any alteration in the structure of the Central Legislature, or what do you mean by that phrase?—(Mr. Wroughton): We have formed no definite ideas that we are prepared to put forward.

116. Do you consider the present Central Government sufficiently strong for your purpose?—We are not satisfied with it, if that is what you mean, but exactly why we are dissatisfied we do not quite know.

The Chairman: That is a perfectly straighforward answer and a very reasonable point of view.

117. Mr. Cadogan: At the end of the other Memorandum the Association of Professional and Business Men say: "A healthy educated public "opinion must be cultivated and the people taught "to realise the privileges and obligations of citizen-"ship." I am reading that in conjunction with section 36, to which the Chairman has referred, and which says: "The view of this Association is that "the existing electoral qualifications are ridiculously "low." Would not you agree the most effective method of teaching these responsibilities and quickening the interest of the public in provincial politics is the franchise, or is it your point that they are not sufficiently educated for the existing electoral qualifications?—(Mr. Dawn) That is so.

118. That is the point? You think swimming should be taught on the bank?—(Mr. Foucar) Not entirely. You will see we say that the education should start in the villages; we do not want to work from the top downwards. It is useless giving votes to people who do not understand for what they are voting.

119. There is one other subsidiary point on which I should like more information. On page 365, you say: "in the Burmese constituencies we have similar mass voting or abstention from voting "carried out at the instigation of hpongyis whose "influence upon the ignorant classes cannot be "over-estimated." We had evidence a day or two ago to the effect that it was only one small section of hpongyis who influenced the political life of the province, and in the case of the great majority they abided by the rules of their order, which forbade them to take part in politics. Is it only a small section?—It is, of course, contrary to their religious rules, and it may be only a small section as compared with the whole body of hpongyis, but it is an important section which has considerable influence

120. U Aung Thin: The European community in Burma may be said to have monopolised all the big business?—(Mr. Wroughton) No.

121. Am I wrong?—Yes.

122. I put it to you that as regards rice, timber, and minerals the European community have something like a monopoly?—Not in rice; in timber and minerals, yes; but not a monopoly.

123. When I say "monopoly" I mean your hold on the business is more than half?—It is in minerals and in teak, but not in other timbers nor in rice.

124. Not in rice?—No.

125. What proportion do you hold in rice?—In 1928 I believe about 25 per cent. of the exportable surplus of the paddy crop was milled by European rice millers.

126. Is that the largest proportion, or the minimum?—That is the approximate amount: roughly one quarter of the exported paddy crop was milled by European firms in 1928.

127. But you admit in teak and minerals you have a monopoly?—Not a monopoly; the largest holding is with Europeans.

128. So your interest in business is very great indeed?—Yes.

129. U Aung Thin: And you would naturally like to proceed more slowly than the people of Burma wish to in the matter of constitutional advance?

The Chairman: Why?

The Witness: I do not agree with that. We do not at present know exactly what advance the responsible members of the people of Burma want.

130. U Aung Thin: I understand from your answers to previous questions you want to move slowly. Take the case of Law and Order; although Law and Order is at present under the control of a Burman member you wish to move cautiously; you would not transfer it and trust it to the control of a Burman minister?—So far as Law and Order is concerned we would move with great caution.

131. I put it to you that your fear is actuated by a desire to safeguard your own interests?—No, distinctly not. The business community cannot do good business in the province unless the province is happy, prosperous and quiet, and that is as far as our interest in politics goes—that the province should be peacefully and quietly governed.

132. U Ba U : You said the growth of crime in Burma was not due to economic causes : is that your belief ?—Yes.

133. Have you ever been in the villages of Upper Burma ?—I was twenty years up there.

134. Perhaps you have visited about a dozen villages in Upper Burma ?—Hundreds.

135. After the villagers have finished ploughing and harvesting the paddy, have they any subsidiary industry in the villages ?—In very, very few places.

136. It is very rare ?—It is rare, yes.

137. To combat successfully the growth of crime in Burma, you are anxious to give more education to the people ?—Yes.

138. Do you mean people should have more primary and secondary education to prevent them from committing crime ?—I do not suggest any definite form of education, but education in the widest sense. I am not prepared to specify the different forms it should take.

139. You say the Burma Legislative Council is in the habit of attacking the police organisation very much ?—Yes.

140. Do you remember the attack was so great that His Excellency had to restore a certain sum of money? —Yes.

Mr. Campagnac : 10 lakhs.

141. U Ba U : After that there came the police reorganisation ; do you remember that ?—Yes.

142. The Legislative Council attacked the police, and they succeeded in reorganising the police. After the reorganisation period have the attacks still gone on ?—My own personal view (not having discussed it with the chairman) is that the term " reorganisation of the police " is hardly correct. After the report of the Retrenchment Committee the police were reduced ; a great number of police posts in the country were abolished, to the detriment of Law and Order.

143. The pay of the personnel was raised ?—But their numbers were lowered.

144. Their morale was improved ?—I am not prepared to say yes or no to that.

145. At present is the Police department under a Burman member ?—It is under the Governor in Council. It is directly under a Burman member, yes.

146. You want to get back the Burman revenue from India so that Burma may spend that revenue on education ?—On the general development of the country.

147. Would you rather this money were spent on making roads, or equally on education also ?— Generally. We are not prepared to specify definitely where we want the money spent, but we want more money spent.

148. Mr. Dawn, you say on page 362 of your Memorandum that representative government is alien to the Burmese tradition ?—(Mr. Dawn) Yes.

149. Have you been in Burma for a long time ? —Yes.

150. Were you in Burma when King Thebaw was in Mandalay ?—I was in Burma before the annexation, yes.

151. Did you get any news from Mandalay that during King Thebaw's time his Government was reformed ?—No, I never had any news of that sort.

U Ba U : There were reforms in Mandalay ; the King had to become a constitutional head.

Lord Burnham : Was that before the massacre there ?

152. U Ba U : After that. Mr. Dawn, you say on page 364 that frauds are very rife at elections, and that coolies vote under names which are not their own. According to my experience, I have my agent there and my agent can ask a man what his name is, and if the coolie says his name is so-and-so, and his name is not on the ticket, he would be found out. Have you had any such instance in Rangoon ? —Personally I know nothing about election methods in Rangoon ; I live in Moulmein ; but Dr. Murray can answer your question. (Dr. Murray) These practices do occur ; they occurred in Rangoon in November last, when the elections took place. Coolies went in and handed in their cards under any name at all, their own names being altogether different. They were given the right to vote and they went inside and voted. They could not read what was written on the card ; they were simply told to cut the first and third names out and leave the others on. They knew nothing else about it. That was with regard to municipal elections. For the council elections they were given a token which they put in the box. We are told some of them did not put it in the box, but took it outside and gave it back to the person who sent them in, and then when several of the tokens had been collected an intelligent person was sent in and put them into the correct box. Even worse things are said.

The Chairman : I think it would be well to invite Mr. Harper, the Collector of Rangoon, to come into the room.

153. U Ba U : You have all along been saying that people have not learnt the practice of responsible government sufficiently, and you have said that the granting of any reforms that have been granted has been premature ?—(Mr. Dawn) Yes.

154. Do you believe that the people of any country will learn the practice of responsible government without giving them any reforms ?—They have got to start at the bottom.

155. You say on page 364 that the villagers have no idea of an election. Have you been to a village during the time of a village headman's election ?—No.

U Ba U : They are very brisk and very keen.

156. The Chairman : I may perhaps tell you, U Ba U, that yesterday I was one of a party that went to a village not far from here, and we had a meeting of the village headman, and I inquired particularly on the point which you mention. I wanted to know how the headman was chosen, and I was told he was chosen by election, though there was a strong general tradition that as far as possible the headmanship should be kept in the family. That is right, is it not ?—(U Ba U) : Yes.

The Chairman : I asked how the election took place, and I was very much interested to learn that it took place not by a show of hands, but by ballot ; and the gentleman who took me, who was the Collector, told me that his experience was that the ballot was exceedingly well worked, and that there were more candidates than one, very often, and that every man who came up had to show why he had the right to vote ; and his own view, undoubtedly, was that the election of the headman was worked on very reasonable lines ; and that confirms what you say, so far as it goes. That was certainly the general effect of what I was told ; and I saw the other headmen and various people who described what happened.

157. U Ba U : With regard to the personnel of the Burma Legislative Council, you say on page 365 that generally the junior pleaders get into the council. Do you know how many pleaders are members of the Legislative Council ?—No, I do not.

The Chairman : We were given some figures, I remember.

158. U Ba U : Is any present minister a junior pleader of poor practice ?—I would rather be excused from answering that question.

159. U Ba U : Do you know that every minister appointed has been a barrister-at-law, except one, who was a doctor ?

The Chairman : That is so, is it ?

U Ba U : Yes.

160. The Chairman : We quite accept that. I was just looking at this official book to see if I could get a little light on one of the points you made,

Would you mind helping me? You pointed out to the witness that, as you thought the Legislative Council here had really, by its criticism of the police, led to an improvement in the service, and I was looking at the book (Vol XI, pp. 211–2), and I see there a motion for retrenchment, for less to be spent on the police, and thereupon there was appointed a Burma Retrenchment Committee, and there was also a Crime Inquiry Committee, and eventually a thing called the Police Inquiry Committee, which seems to have made a report in 1924. I gather that it recommended that the police force should be reduced, that the number of police stations should be reduced, and also a number of the force, that a number of outposts should be abolished, and that the pay should be raised. That was the general scheme of it, and there seems to have been a substantial reduction, of nearly 2,000 head constables, and the substitution of a smaller number of higher-paid and more efficient officers.

U Ba U: Yes.

161. The Chairman: That is what you are on?

U Ba U: Yes.

162. The Chairman: "This reorganisation may be "ascribed partly to the action of the Council in "reducing the Budget, and in part to the recom-"mendations of the Police Enquiry Committee." It goes on to say (page 212 of Vol XI), "It was "followed in 1925 and 1926 by a serious rise in the "number of dacoities and robberies, to cope with "which the strength of the force had to be increased." Would you mind telling me this. The force was increased again. Did the Legislative Council object to the increase, or did they vote it?

U Ba U: They voted it.

163. Mr. Rafi: In order further to emphasise the point made by the Chairman, namely, the difficulty of arriving at a correct understanding of the financial relation between the Provincial Government and the Government of India, may I draw your attention to the difference between the two sets of accounts prepared by the Burma Government for 1923-24. In paragraph 24 of your Memorandum you show that the Indian Government was the gainer to the extent of seven crores. Is that right?—(Mr. Wroughton): That sum of seven crores was not spent in Burma.

Mr. Rafi: Yes, that the Indian Government was a gainer to that extent.

The Chairman: I think the witness's answer is slightly more accurate than the way you put it. It is quite accurate to say it was not spent in Burma, specifically, but, of course, the witness is protecting himself against being supposed not to recognise that the Central Government does do things for Burma; for instance, pays for the army. So it is not necessarily pure gain, you see.

Mr. Rafi: Then it was not spent on Burma, the witness says.

164. The Chairman: I thought his language was "spent in Burma."—The seven crores was spent out of Burma.

165. Mr. Rafi: Then if it was spent out of Burma, Burma stood to lose seven crores?—No.

166. The Chairman: Do you think so? If you paid for the whole of the army used in Burma elsewhere, do you think Burma would get nothing for it?—No; the distinction is quite plain, is it not?

Mr. Rafi: According to this statement—I am speaking subject to correction—nine crores went out of Burma, and the expenditure was 2.75 crores. That is the statement in the memorandum. The revenue for the year 1923-24 was 9.75 crores, and the expenditure for the same year was 2.75 crores. So I deducted that 2.75 from the 9.75, and got 7 crores to the credit of the Government of India.

The Chairman: Yes, I see, Mr. Rafi. I think what you were saying was right. You see, the phrase is not merely "spent in Burma"; it is "spent in and on behalf of Burma," and so put, I think your calculation is logically right.

167. Lord Strathcona: Does not the next sentence qualify that rather?

Mr. Rafi: Yes, I was coming to that. I was merely interested in drawing the attention of these gentlemen to this fact, that while the witness points out that the Government of India had seven crores to its credit, the Government of Burma for that same year prepared a statement of account showing that there was 20 lakhs 52 thousand deficit. Mr. Layton has seen this. There is no compound interest about this; the compound interest would be in this third column. This is irrespective of the compound interest.

168. Has your attention been drawn to that?—(Mr. Wroughton) The Government of India declined to be drawn on these figures, and I really feel disposed to say the same myself.

169. On which figures?—These figures, the 9.75 and the 2.75 crores. We brought this in as the general position of affairs.

170 Mr. Rafi: I wanted to draw your attention to the fact that there is another set of accounts prepared by the Burma Government saying that the Government of India, far from making a gain, were losing to the extent of 20 lakhs of rupees, just to show you how difficult it is to come to a correct understanding of the financial position as between Burma and India.

Mr. Campagnac: If I may be permitted to say so, that statement was not prepared by the Government of Burma, but by the Accountant-General, and the figures were not accepted by the Burma Government.

The Witness: Those figures have never come to our notice, have they?

Mr. Rafi: I do not know if Mr. Campagnac is in the confidence of the Government of Burma, but I see a statement here, "Printed by the Government of Burma."

The Chairman: We need not have a controversy about it. I think the source of the document is the Government of India, and the fact that the printing press of the Government of Burma has printed some copies would not prove the contrary.

Mr. Rafi: "Authorised by the Government of "Burma."

The Chairman: That would not prove the contrary.

171. Mr. Rafi: Will you please refer to page 359 of your Memorandum: "There is a strong feeling "that India derives from Burma a greater revenue "than the services rendered to the province "warrant." Do you know that the financial relations between Burma and the Government of India are governed by the Meston Settlement?—I believe so, yes. They are greatly affected by it, anyway.

172. And that the question of services rendered by the Government of India to Burma does not arise so long as the Meston Settlement is in force?—Our complaint is that we get rather bad treatment under the Meston Settlement. We think at the moment that our settlement under the Meston Settlement is inequitable to Burma.

173. You want a readjustment more favourable to Burma, do you not?—Yes.

174. I mean a readjustment of her financial relations with India?—We want a greater share of Burma revenues spent in Burma.

175. Do you mean you would like to have a revision of the Meston Settlement or fiscal autonomy? Please refer to Paragraph 10.—As we said in our Memorandum, until we know how we stand financially vis-à-vis the Central Government, we are not prepared to say that we should be satisfied with a revision of the Meston award.

176. Or whether it is fiscal autonomy you want? That is so.

177. In paragraph 22 you say there is a dearth of able politicians amongst the Burman and other indigenous elements of the population?—Yes.

178. But do not you think that that is rather an obstacle in the way of separation ?—We have never come down on pro-separation or anti-separation so far.

179. I beg your pardon ?—We have never said that we were in favour of a separation, so far, or that we were opposed to it.

180. I have noticed that, but I am just putting to you this question as a matter of common interest. Do not you think that is rather a point against separation ?—I do not know what the politicians in the other provinces are like.

181. You say in paragraph 27 (page 361) : " Yet another form of discrimination which has been " attempted is the restriction of employment in " Government service to Burman Buddhists ? "—Yes.

182. Do you mean that while there is no legal bar to the employment of other than Burman Buddhists as a matter of fact, discrimination is made ?—... was at one time ; I do not know whether it is still. I think Government brought in some regulations about it.

183. Then this sentence here is not intended to cover present conditions : is that what it comes to ?—I think it is a fairly fair statement.

184. It is a fairly fair statement which perhaps covers present-day conditions ?—It might.

185. Sir Hari Singh Gour : What is the present position, Mr. Rafi ? You can inform the Conference.

Mr. Rafi : The answer is implied in the question I put : there is no legal bar, but as a matter of fact there is discrimination.

The Chairman : To a previous question put by you the witness made an answer which was amusing, but I do not think it quite met your question, Mr. Rafi. Perhaps I may refer you to page 360 of the document, where he undoubtedly does draw a distinction between the material for political administration in Burma and the material for political administration in India : " the standard of advanced education " among the Burman population is lower than that " in India, and there are few, if any, Burmans " qualified to hold the high Government posts " which, in India, are filled with some degree of " distinction by highly educated Indians."

186. Mr. Rafi : Yes. I will now turn my attention to the Association of Business Men. In your Memorandum you refer to certain irregularities by district councils ?—(Mr. Dawn) Yes.

187. Do you know the Montford report contemplated that local bodies should learn by their mistakes ?—It is quite likely ; I do not know.

188. Do not you think if the District Councils Act had defined the powers and functions of circle boards, instead of leaving it to the District Councils to delegate those powers and functions, the circle boards would have functioned more usefully, in view of the fact that they were being given a new system to work under ?—Probably.

189. In paragraph 16, page 363, you refer to the large number of vacancies which had to be filled by nomination ?—Yes.

190. Are you aware that the creation of District Councils synchronised with the introduction of Dyarchy ?—Yes.

191. And that these District Councils were boycotted as being Dyarchic Councils ?—No.

192. You are not aware of that ? With regard to paragraph 17 of your Memorandum, do you know on what principle the working of local bodies is classified as satisfactory or otherwise ?—It is laid down on a specified plan.

193. Mr. Rafi : Will you give the reference ? I should like to draw the attention of the Conference to that.

The Chairman : Will you summarise it for us, Mr. Rafi ? We know you will do it most fairly.

Mr. Rafi : The reference is the annual report of the Local Fund Audit Department in Burma, page 3 : " Satisfactory. If there are only a few " very minor objections in procedure which do not " affect the finances. Fairly satisfactory : Where " there are a larger, though not large, number of " minor objections, but those only technical and not " wilful. Not satisfactory : Where there are more " serious technical objections but still no financial " irregularities. Unsatisfactory : Where the number of objections is large or previous audit-notes " have not been properly attended to, and or where " financial irregularities exist, e.g., double payments " without dishonest intentions. Very unsatisfactory : " Where serious financial irregularities, including " misappropriations, embezzlements, forgeries are " found."

The Chairman : Thank you very much ; that is what I wanted to know. That shows one may well neglect the higher categories, because, especially with want of experience, it is almost inevitable there will be technical mistakes ; but you will agree with me that if the " very unsatisfactory " cases were well founded that is a much graver matter.

194. Mr. Rafi : It would be, sir. (To witness) You have referred to embezzlements committed by officers of local bodies. I take it you are aware of instances where there have been embezzlements in some cases in large Government offices ?—I cannot recall any at the moment, but no doubt they have happened.

195. Are you aware that District Councils are suffering from a chronic lack of money, and therefore are not in a position to carry on sanitary projects ?—They have powers, I understand, for raising money.

196. Yes, but you know for a long time Government had a special officer deputed to go into the question of finances with a view to ascertaining how much could be contributed by the local Government with a view to relieving the situation ?—I was not aware of it.

197. Are you aware that the present state of their finances does not permit of their engaging an adequate staff, competent to cope with such situations as may arise within their respective jurisdictions ?—I was not aware of it.

198. Mr. Rafi : You say in your Memorandum that crowds of coolie voters surround the polling stations and prevent respectable voters from gaining access ?—Yes.

199. Is the intention to convey that that is deliberately done, or is it the inevitable result of large crowds turning out to vote ?—(Mr. Darwood) The way it is done might give the impression it is deliberate, but it is difficult to know what was in the minds of those who did it.

200. Is not the appearance of a large crowd at a polling station indicative of good organisation ? —Of much organisation, yes ; I will not say good !

201. You complain there has been personation on a large scale ?—Yes.

202. At all the booths except your own ?—I did not say that, but very little if any took place at the European booth.

203. Do not you think it extraordinary that not a single case of personation should be brought to light if it took place on a large scale ?—It was very largely spoken of. That no case was brought to the courts was simply due to the fact that the candidates, having spent a good deal of money on the election, were not prepared to spend a great deal more in contesting a case. These cases, I learn, are exceedingly expensive, even when it is a barrister who contests one !

204. Where did you get that idea from—that it is the cost of bringing these personations to light which has prevented people filing election petitions ? —I have had two candidates in my room consulting me with regard to the matter. One was a successful candidate and the other an unsuccessful one. When it became apparent what the cost would be they said it was not worth it.

205. Mr. Rafi: What do you think the cost would be?

The Chairman: Does that matter? The last answer shows the witness had at least some ground for his answer. If it is anything like it is in England, I will say at once I believe election petitions are very expensive matters.

Mr. Rafi: It is not so here.

206. The Chairman: What is it here?

Mr. Rafi: I should say at the outside Rs500.

The Witness (Dr. Murray): If it is multiplied ten times that will give the correct impression. Rs3,500 would be a moderate guess of the cost.

The Chairman: The main thing is to get a fair impression of how matters really stand. We do not want to go into great detail. One reason—I do not know whether it is a just reason or not—why people were not willing to bring these matters into investigation might be this. There are more sides than one, and more than one might be engaged in the same sort of practice. I do not know whether it is true or not. I am making no reflections. Mr. Harper had charge of some elections, and I do not know whether Mr. Rafi would like to ask Mr. Harper what his own impression is or whether he would like to continue with more detailed questions to the deputation.

207 Mr. Rafi: I must get to the bottom of the cost of this litigation. Witnesses make statements which require to be tested a bit. I suppose the expensiveness of litigation would be probably due to the fee that a person would have to pay to a lawyer? —(Dr. Murray): Very possibly.

208. That would be the main item of expenditure? —I think so. I do not know.

209. Of course you are not in a position to say what the fees of a lawyer generally are in a case like this?—I have heard that it is always spoken of in four figures. I understand that there are barristers present here, members of my deputation, who have been engaged in these cases.

210. The Chairman: I personally have never been engaged in election cases and never had any other part in them, but I always understood that sometimes they last a long time and usually a large number of witnesses are called?—(Mr. Paget): That is so, sir.

Mr. Rafi: Witnesses are not paid very heavily here as they are in England.

The Chairman: The main thing is really what is a fair description of facts.

211. Mr. Rafi: Do you know of any election petitions by any defeated candidates on the score that there was personation in regard to the municipal elections in the city of Rangoon?—(Dr. Murray) Yes.

212. How many?—I could not tell you straight off.

213. How many cases were there on the score of personation?—I must think before I can reply. I cannot tell you straight off.

214. On page 364 you say: "In the Muhammadan "community the same tactics are employed as in "the Hindu and it is not too much to say that there "are two large employers of labour who can return "any candidate who secures their good offices." I do not want to ask you the names of those two employers of labour for obvious reasons, but do you know that these two employers of labour threw their weight on the side of a Mussulman candidate, who was defeated in the elections in November?—They reversed the election when they threw their weight. The rejected candidate at the legislative council election was elected at the municipal election as the result of those persons throwing in their weight on his behalf.

215. I was referring to these two employers of labour throwing in their weight on his side in the Legislative Council election, and yet the Mussulman candidate was defeated. He did not secure a seat? —Those who were elected were also Mussulmans, I think. A Moslem may have been defeated, but those who were accepted were Mussulmans.

216. I merely want to draw your attention to the fact of a Mussalman candidate having been defeated. —By two other Mussulmans.

217. No, by a Parsee; and I want to point out that that happened in spite of the fact that these two employers of labour about whom you have spoken had thrown their weight on his side.—That is not quite correct.

218. What is not quite correct?—It is very difficult for me to explain that without mentioning names. If I could mention names I could make it perfectly clear.

* * * * * * * *

233. * * * Is there any one amongst you besides Mr. Dawn who has got experience of district municipal administration?—(Mr. Dawn) No, not in the deputation, but in the Association there are.

234. Mr. Dawn, I think you were a member of the Moulmein municipality until recently?—Yes.

235. Did your experience of the working of that municipality lead you to think that district municipalities are being worked inefficiently?—You will notice from paragraph 28, page 364 (Memorandum of the Association of Professional and Business Men in Burma) that efficiency was conspicuous by its absence.

236. One word about crime. Do you not think that the principal causes of the extensive crime prevalent in this country are drink and gambling? —(Mr. Darwood) I do not think so.

* * * * * * * *

238. Mr. Campagnac: Mr. Darwood, I would like to address these remarks to you. You have been a barrister practising in Moulmein for a number of years?—Yes.

239. And you have been a sessions judge in Moulmein for a number of years?—Yes.

240. And you have officiated on more than one occasion as a judge of the High Court?—Yes.

241. We have heard a great deal about murders here?—Yes.

242. Would I be right in assuming that so far as the Burmese are concerned, the murders committed by them are very rarely premeditated?—It is a difficult question to answer. That depends upon what you describe as premeditation. I quite admit that over fifty per cent. of the cases are committed on the spur of the moment.

243. Due to sudden heat and passion?—Quite right, and to the fact that the Burmese are always carrying a knife about them.

244. And a number of these murders are committed at Pwes?—Quite a number of them are.

245. And when a man is under the influence of liquor?—Sometimes.

246. So far as your experience goes, has capital punishment been any deterrent at all in this province so far as the Burmese are concerned?—I should not think so.

* * * * * * * *

248. Mr. Campagnac: You told us that there have been attacks made on the Police by the Burma Legislative Council?—(Mr. Wroughton) Yes.

249. As far as you are aware, there have been no particular attacks made against the European and Anglo-Indian Police?—I was speaking of attacks against the Police as a whole, not particularly against either the Indians or the Burmese or the Europeans or the Anglo-Indians—just the general and rather irresponsible attacks against the Police as a whole.

250. The attacks have been based on the fact that every year expenditure was increased on the Police, while there was no reduction in crime; and the attitude taken up by the Legislative Council was this: "Why should we go on spending more money "on the Police Department when they could produce "no results?" That was the argument of the Opposition; was that not so?—I do not think that the argument was quite as large as that. I do not quite recollect the argument.

251. When you were asked whether you would transfer Law and Order to a Minister, you said something about pressure ; is this what you intended, namely, that political pressure might be put upon a minister to employ people in the Police who were unsuitable ? Is it not your experience that a minister is expected to give employment to people who have supported him at elections and things of that sort ?—I do not think I can say anything which really will carry you any distance in regard to that.

252. We have heard a great deal about people being very large-hearted and generous and in that way encouraging crime. But is it not a fact that during the last few years Government has offered rewards to people who assisted the people in frustrating dacoities ?—Yes.

253. And has not that resulted in a large number of dacoities being frustrated ? Have not the people responded to that ?—You gather that from the newspapers ?

254. I gather that from reports ?—Yes.

255. At page 361 (paragraph 27) of your Memorandum you say that there has been an attempt to restrict Government appointments to Burman Buddhists. Is that based on your experience ?—It is my personal experience ; I should say it was.

256. At present a person who seeks employment under Government has first to pass an examination, and after passing the examination he has to come before a Selection Board ?—Yes.

257. And so far as your experience goes, the Selection Board has been partial to Burman Buddhists ?—I will not say the Selection Board as a whole. I have once served on the Board and I have gathered that impression.

258. When a candidate appears before this Selection Board the first thing that the Board attempts to do is to ascertain whether he is a Burman or one domiciled in this country. Was that your experience on the Selection Board ?—My recollection is not good enough to say what exactly it was.

* * * * * * * *

260. Mr. Campagnac : * * * (To the witness) : Then you were asked about the tariff duty on steel. You were asked whether the tariff duty operated unfavourably for Burma. Is it a fact that this tariff duty was imposed with a view to protect Tata's ?—It is common knowledge.

261. Is any steel imported from India into Burma ? —I am not absolutely certain of the fact, but I think it is a very, very small proportion indeed.

262. Then you were also asked about hides. Was this industry chiefly in the hands of the Germans before the war ?—To a certain extent.

263. Your hides being inferior to Indian hides, it is very difficult for you to compete against hides from India ?—Yes.

264. So that you have to compete against hides from India and Europe ?—Yes.

Afternoon.

(RAO BAHADUR RAJAH AND MR. KIKABHAI PREMCHAND WERE ABSENT.)

Deputation from the Burma Chamber of Commerce jointly with the Deputation from the Burma Association of Professional and Business Men —CONTINUED.

(THE DEPUTATION CONSISTED OF THE GENTLEMEN PRESENT IN THE FORENOON).

1. U Ba Shin : Mr. Wroughton, may I know for what period you have been in Burma ?—(Mr. Wroughton) : 28 years.

2. Of course I can fairly expect from you a reply with regard to the present day cry of the separation of Burma from India ?—So far as I know, there is no unanimity amongst Burmans on that point. One section of Burmans is opposed to the separation, while another section appears to be in favour of separation.

3. Those who are in favour of separation are over 80 per cent. approximately, is it not ?—I cannot say.

4. The Chairman : There is a difference of view, you think, amongst Burmans themselves ?—Yes. The section which is opposed to separation, I think, oppose it on purely political grounds. They think that if Burma is separated they would not get any political advance. I think that if you disabuse their minds of that point, there would be complete unanimity on the subject of separation.

5. U Ba Shin : The view of your Chamber is this that you recommend a form of government for Burma which will content the people of the country, is it not ?—Yes, " and which will yet contain adequate " safeguards for the preservation of internal peace " and for the protection of all commercial interests."

6. The firms in Burma usually employ Indian labour ?—In factories they do ; they also employ a great deal of Burman labour in districts. The firm which I represent employs more Burmans than Indians.

7. What firm ?—The Bombay-Burma Trading Corporation.

8. Take, for instance, the rice exporting firms, such as Steele Bros. They employ Indian labour in the mills ?—Yes.

9. One of the reasons for employing Indian labour is that it is cheaper than Burman labour ?—Not cheaper, but it is more efficient.

10. You say it is more efficient. Am I to understand that you have tried the Burman labour in these rice mills, or is it purely a speculation that Indian labour is more efficient than Burman labour ? —Both Burmans and Indians are employed in mills, but the Burmans are mostly employed in clerical work. As a labourer the Burman is not as efficient as the Indian labourer.

11. Efficiency in carrying bags of rice, is that what you mean ?—Burmans generally dislike manual labour.

12. Another reason is that the standard of living of a Burman is high and he considers that he is not paid sufficiently ?—I do not know about that.

13. In paragraph 23 you say : " The scarcity of " experienced leaders among the ranks of local " politicians further leads this Chamber to view with " some concern the proposal to eliminate entirely " from the Provincial Legislatures the official " element." I would like to know what you mean by " experienced leaders ? "—The common meaning which " experienced leaders " convey.

* * * * * * * *

15. U Ba Shin: * * * In paragraph 24 you say: "The crime record of Burma is notorious "and even under the present regime there is so "little indication of improvement that any reduction "of the British element would be fraught with "danger." Take, for instance, the city of Chicago. Is not the crime record there very notorious?—We are only concerned with Burma. From the recent summaries published in the papers I find that the crime in Burma is slightly on the downward course at the present moment.

16. Take the case of the Rangoon town. Rangoon as you know is a cosmopolitan city?—Yes.

17. Have you made any attempt to find out the percentage of the crimes committed by non-Burmans? For instance, take the China town where lots of crimes are committed by non-Burmans. I think that though non-Burmans commit crimes they are classified under the heading "Burmans"?—We have made no attempt.

18. Sra Shwe Ba: On page 362 of the Memorandum submitted by the Association of Professional and Business Men in Burma you have used the term "non-Burmans." May I know whether you include Karens under this term?—(Mr. Foucar) This refers to non-Burmese subjects, rather than to persons who are not subjects of the Burmese kingdom.

19. And the indigenous races like Karens?—Well, the question of the Karens was not considered.

20. Can you tell us how the funds of the District Councils are raised?—They have the powers to raise taxes, of course, but I do not think they use those powers. At present the funds are made available by allocation by Government.

21. I suppose you realise that it is only a small amount that is raised by taxation of pounds, ferries and bazaars, and do you know that 80 per cent. of these funds goes for educational purposes?—I would not be prepared to say whether that is correct or not. Personally I doubt it.

22. Sir Arthur Froom: Turning to page 361 of the Chamber's Memorandum, paragraph 24, have you had before you the Government Memorandum?* —(Mr Wroughton) No.

23. At any rate in that document page 213* is devoted to Police and the regard in which the Legislative Council holds the Police, and it gives a long history of various questions in the Legislative Council and of the cuts made in the budget of 1923-24. One paragraph I would like to read to you from page 213,* and that is this: "Full advantage was taken "of the different budget debates for criticism of "the department which developed on one occasion "into what a member termed 'the exciting and "exhilarating game of Police-baiting'." I was wondering whether you had this in view when you wrote paragraph 24, in which you say: "The Police "has been a favourite subject of attack in the "Provincial Council." Now, the position I put to you is this. Does your Chamber think, if Police is a favourite subject of attack in the Provincial Council, that the Police are better safeguarded when that department is in the hands of a member of Government and is a reserved subject than when it is in the hands of a minister who holds his office at the will of the Provincial Council?—Yes.

25. Do you think that District Boards and municipalities would have a chance of greater success if they received the advice and, perhaps, the sympathy of the Provincial Government?—(Mr. Dawn) I think so.

26. You think there is room for improvement in that?—Yes.

27. The Chairman: I am a good deal struck by this passage on page 445,* part IV, of the Burma Government Memorandum in regard to local self-government. I think it is worth reading: "The "powers of supervision and control possessed by "the local Government and its officers have already "been detailed. In answer to a question as to the "steps taken by Government to improve the working "of a certain local body the Honourable Minister "replied that 'the considered policy of Government "is to interfere as little as possible with local self-"governing bodies.' On the 5th July, 1927, a "resolution was moved that 'instructions should be "issued to all officials to refrain from unnecessarily "interfering in matters pertaining to the internal "administration of all self-governing bodies,'" and so on. Of course, everybody is against unnecessary interference, but is that all the point? It struck me very much in many parts of our tour. The view which seems to be quite commonly held in the ministry of local self-government is that the ministry of local self-government ought not to interfere with local self-governing bodies. I do not know, of course, what the local view may be, but that is not the English view at all. Our view is that a minister of local self-government and his department has got a most important duty in keeping the local bodies up to the mark, by audit, by inspection and by all sorts of things, and I cannot help thinking that there has been rather a departure from our own ideas there.

Mr. Rafi: The local people create the distinction between interference and advice. A deputy commissioner or a commissioner very often raises very minor points, petty points which are somewhat annoying, but which do not carry one far. If there were inspectors as in England, going round, visiting periodically and giving advice, it would be different.

The Chairman: It may be so. I am not criticising anybody. I am pointing out the conditions. In England the part which the ministry of local self-government takes is by no means confined to giving advice. If it is found, for example, that rates were not being properly collected, or if there were serious grounds to think that there was misappropriation and defalcation, they would do a great deal more than advise, I can assure you. That is why I think there is a curious difference between the view taken here and the view taken elsewhere. I am not saying that our method is the best, I am only saying that is different.

Mr. Rafi: If a municipality raises the pay of an officer and, say, twenty-five members think it is right; one man, the deputy commissioner, comes in and says that that view is wrong. He says that they should not have given that increment, or that they should not have engaged an extra clerk. These are the things that the local bodies resent.

28. Sir Arthur Froom: Do you concern yourselves at all with any advance which may or may not be made in any other province in India—it may be the Punjab, Bombay, or Bengal?—(Mr. Wroughton) With regard to the form of advance, we are not prepared to make any recommendations, but we do hold that if the provinces in India do get an advance Burma must receive a similar advance.

29. On page 361 of your Memorandum, you say: "The peace and prosperity of the country depend "largely upon the removal of the disabilities which "have been set out above, namely, internal financial "stringency and retarded development resulting "from the diversion of the country's revenues to "the central exchequer; enforced participation in "a protective policy which does not benefit Burma "at all, and the subordination of her interests to "those of the Indian provinces." Then you go on to say that if the "Commission can find means of "removing these disabilities whilst Burma remains "a part of the Indian Empire, commercial opinion at "least will be satisfied." Now, take the steel protection which obtains in India. Many commercial bodies supported that Bill. Or take any protection that might be given for India. What is good for India might be poison for Burma? Can you conceive that India out of a fear of Burma suffering would give up its tariff?—No, I do not think so.

30. So this hope that you express that the Commission might be able to solve the difficulty is setting the Commission rather a difficult task ?—Our view is that we like to remain part of India and yet get as far away from Indian politics as we can, if that is possible.

31. You do not expect India to give up a policy which they regard as the correct one, say, to protect the steel industry in India. And then there is another suggestion that India should have a reserved coastal trade, which, you say, would hit Burma very hard. Do you expect India to give up those objects for the satisfaction of a province like Burma ? Do you think it is reasonable that India would do so ?—No. With regard to steel, for instance, I do not think Burma would object to this import duty on steel if the money went to make cheaper houses in Burma or for the development of the province. If the steel duty, which goes to the Central Government, came to the Provincial Government we should not worry about it.

32. But this particular duty on steel was only started for the benefit of the steel industry in India and not for the development of Burma, or to build cheaper houses in Burma ?—But it has made dearer houses here.

Sir Arthur Froom : It has made dearer houses in India, too. I only point this out. You say : " If " your Commission can find means of removing " these disabilities," etc. I am not a Commissioner, but a member of the Committee ; but it occurred to me that you were setting the Commission a very hard task.

33. The Chairman : That is nothing new ! I suppose what may have been in your mind was something of this sort. I do not know whether such a thing is practicable. Might it be that you were thinking of something of this kind, that while remaining within the boundaries of India you should yet be in some way or other for some purposes separated ; say, for fiscal purposes, without actually passing beyond the boundaries of the Government of India ?—Yes, we have that in mind.

34. Sir Arthur Froom : As regards any advance in Burma to provincial self-government, are your ideas in any way influenced at all by Burma remaining within India or outside India ?—No.

35. Whatever advance you may be prepared to concede towards provincial self-government in Burma is not altered in any way whether Burma remains part of India or whether Burma is separated ?—No.

36. Sir Hari Singh Gour : Following up the last question about the Steel Protection Act, is it not a fact that the Steel Protection Act protects everybody in Burma who wishes to start a steel industry equally with those who wish to start a steel industry in India ?—Yes, but we have got no coal to start it.

37. The Madras Presidency might just as well complain of the steel protection bounties, because they have no coal and they have no steel ?—In Madras they can buy steel at the Tata works and rail it to Madras. Here, you have to take it to Calcutta by rail and then by sea to Burma.

38. The freight from Jamshedpur to Rangoon is the same as from Jamshedpur to Madras. Or, take the case of Tuticorin or of the Punjab. Steel has to be carried from Jamshedpur to Calcutta and from Calcutta to the Punjab, all by train, and the Punjab has no steel industry. The Central Provinces, too, have not got a steel industry. So when you are a part of the whole you cannot take it compartmentally and say that every duty or every tax must benefit you or that you must get a share. You can only participate in the general benefit that accrues to the Empire. If you take it compartmentally, one tax may benefit you and the other tax may not. You must take the sum total of all the benefits you receive as members of the Empire. Is that not a sound proposition ?—I think so.

39. Take for instance the case of the bamboo pulp. You remember they exploited bamboo pulp in Burma and lost 20 lakhs of rupees. That industry was protected and an effort was made to utilise your pulp and on that an experiment was made, on which Rs20 lakhs were sunk. Now supposing it had been a success—it might be still a success—it would have benefited you. It may lead to better results, and then you will benefit by it. Is that not so ?—We do not dispute that we get benefits from being associated with India.

40. Take the bamboo paper industry or the bamboo pulp industry or the export duty on hides. Now, supposing you wanted to start a tannery that would benefit you. It gives you an opening to develop an industry locally if you wish to do so ?—We have already tried the tanning industry and failed.

41. You have failed, but somebody else may succeed, It gives you a chance. The point is it gives you a certain measure of protection because yours is a nascent industry, and as such as business men you recognise that this protection is not any discrimination against you any more than it is against Madras or the Punjab. It is to the benefit of the country as a whole, of which Burma is a part. If you look at it from that point of view do you not think as commercial men that it is for the protection of the country as a whole ? Take, for instance, your own country, England. You have protection of silk and gloves. Because of the fact that silk and gloves are not made in every county in England, your county council cannot rise up against Parliament and say : " We do not make gloves ; why protect gloves ? We do not make silk ; why protect silk ? " That exactly is the position in India. The fact that you do not make these does not in the slightest degree stand in the way of protection of the industry, because it helps everybody, including yourself ? (No answer.)

42. As regards the constitutional question, you have very rightly said in paragraph 21 (page 361) of your Memorandum that : " Owing to its lack of " knowledge of the inside working of the reformed " constitution, and of the difficulties which have " been encountered, this Chamber does not feel " itself competent to express in more than very " general terms its views as to the direction which " further modification of the constitution should " take." But at the same time associated as you are and have been for a very long time with the people of Burma, you cannot help observing certain facts upon which you might be able to help the Joint Free Conference. The points upon which I should like to have your information are points set out in the Memorandum of the Association of Professional and Business Men in Burma. There are three points in that Memorandum and you can say whether your experience justified the statement of facts mentioned by that Association. The first is at the bottom of page 362 :—" The idea of self-government or, " indeed, of any form of representative government, " is entirely alien to their traditions and upbringing. " And this is just as much true of the period of British " occupation as it was of the earlier days of the " independent kingdom. Until a very few years " ago the Burman was content to leave the entire " direction of affairs in the hands of the rulers : In " fact, he did not even know of any other form of " Government." And then you find this in paragraph 4 :—" These considerations have led to the " formation of this Association with the object of " laying before your Commission reasons which " convince its members that, so far as Burma is " concerned, the stage has not yet been reached " when a political advance can be made even as far " as a constitution on the lines of that now proposed " for the Colony of Ceylon." And then at page 362 the Association says :—" It must be noted too that " the average Burman, though not altogether " illiterate, is ignorant, and the administration reports " show that he is lacking in self-restraint and is of " a credulous disposition. Consequently he is easily " led or misled. Such being the case, the normal " process of educating him politically should have " been gradual and progressive." And then later at page 364, it is said :—" There is lacking at present " amongst the lower classes all sense of co-operation, " public spirit and responsibility, and, until some " such feeling is acquired, no good purpose can be " served by the grant of further powers to the " classes concerned." I am simply putting these together so that you may be able to understand the points I wish you to give us some information about. Now the sum total of the views of the Association are that Burma has had no tradition or self-governing institutions for any length of time, that Reforms were introduced for the first time in Burma only in 1922, a matter of only about six years now, that the masses are lacking in self-respect, are credulous, there is a great deal of crime and they are at present lacking in any spirit of co-operation and public spirit and responsibility so as to be able to carry on the work of a self-governing administration. Are you in agreement with those views ?—(Mr. Wroughton) We are not prepared, sir, to be cross-examined on other people's Memoranda. We do say that if there is to be any further advance in self-government in the provinces in India, Burma must have the same degree of it.

43. I will come to that later. It is only your experience bearing on the statement of facts contained in the Association's Memorandum that I want, from what you have been able to observe and see for yourself.—I am not prepared to say that those are not correct, and my own personal view is that you cannot put back the hands of the clock.

44. That is a question of policy with which we will deal next. But are you in general agreement with those statements of facts ? That is the point ? —(Mr. Howison) Speaking for myself I may say that my own personal opinion is that those statements are substantially correct.

45. Then we go on to the next statement. It is perfectly true that in 1922 Burma was given a measure of constitutional advance on a line with that given to India, and it would be impossible to put back the hands of the clock, as you have put it. But if the matter has to be decided for the first time to-day, and we have not got the fact that we stand committed to a measure of advance already granted to Burma in 1922, if we had to start on a clean slate and we have not anything written upon it before, then would you think that in view of these circumstances which your experience has borne out now any advance in the direction of constitutional expansion of the country would be justified ?—(Mr. Wroughton) It is too problematical, sir. I cannot express any opinion on that.

46. When you say, gentlemen, that if India gets any advance, Burma also must get the same measure of advance, you feel that that is because, whether rightly or wrongly, deservedly or undeservedly, Burma should not be left back in the race ?—No ; that is because the Burmese are a proud race and a very capable race in many ways, and I think they have acquitted themselves as well as any other province in India under the Reforms, and therefore we think that if the Conference decides that other provinces should get any further measure of Reforms, these people also must get the same.

47. And if other provinces do not get, you should not also get ; that is a question of relativity—if India gets, why should not we also get ?—It comes to that of course.

48. The whole question, therefore, turns on this ; Burma got Reforms because India got it, and if India gets further advance, why should not Burma get, too ?—We say that Burma deserves advance if India gets it because Burma has acquitted herself well.

49. The position is really historical. Historically Burma got advance as India got it, and therefore it would be extremely invidious for Burma to be left out when India gets further instalment of Reforms. That is the position. If you do not wish to answer that question, I will not press it ?—I think I have expressed my idea as far as I can.

50. As regards the question of Law and Order, while making no recommendation on the future constitution of Burma, you do make a recommenation as regards the reservation of Law and Order in paragraph 24 of your Memorandum. You have said, in answer to a question put by one of my honourable colleagues, that it is perfectly true that there have been attacks and irresponsible criticism on the police administration of Burma, and you have further said that so far as the province of Burma is concerned there has been no such thing as " Dyarchy." Mr. Hartshorn put you the question that if there has been no difference at all in the practical actual working of Law and Order, what difference would it make if instead of being managed by a member it is managed by a minister ?—Law and Order at present, I think, is managed by a committee with the Governor at its head.

51. But supposing we had a minister with the Governor at the head ?—It was not Law and Order that was subjected to irresponsible criticism. Irresponsible criticism cannot be carried home to Law and Order under the present form of Government.

52. Are you quite sure about that. It has been carried home as one of my honourable colleagues pointed out to you, that there was an attack on the police which was immediately followed up by a reorganisation of the police, abolishing certain outposts and reducing the number of policemen, with the result that there was a recrudescence of crime ?—I am not prepared to admit that the attack on the police by the legislative council was the cause of the appointment of the Police Enquiry Committee.

53. But you replied to that question in that strain ? —The police re-organisation took place after that, but I am not prepared to say that it was as a result of that attack.

54. But are you prepared to go as far as to say that the criticism of the members of the legislative council as regards Law and Order and the Police being a reserved department has not influenced the the decision of the Local Government in that respect ? —I am not in a position to answer that question.

55. And therefore it makes very little difference if the Law and Order and the Police are in the hands of ministers so far as the criticisms are concerned. On the other hand, when they find that Law and Order and the Police are their own department in the hands of a responsible minister and that they are responsible for working it, they will begin to feel a greater responsibility ?—I am not prepared to accept that view myself.

56. Are you prepared to dissent from that view ? —Yes.

57. As regards the presence of the official element in the legislature, it has been pointed out to us in several provinces that that is an impediment in the way of formation of parties and the formation of party programmes. Have you got any view on that ? —We discussed it over and over again, but the subject is so wide that we could not come to any conclusion on it.

58. So I take it that so far as the question of Law and Order and the question of further advance are concerned, those are not matters on which you are prepared to be cross-examined ?

Lord Burnham : In answer he said that they were opposed to the transfer of Law and Order.

Sir Hari Singh Gour : That, of course, is the answer ; I was asking the reasons for it.

59. The Chairman : I thought your question was about the official bloc ?

Sir Hari Singh Gour : Yes.

60. The Chairman : I think it stands like this, that these gentlemen, who after all are a body of business men and gave their views on a certain number of topics, say, and quite naturally, that as a body they do not profess to have examined all the constitutional questions which may be suggested to them and that they would rather decline to offer their views about them ?—Yes, sir.

61. Sir Hari Singh Gour : Now, passing on to the next question of the safeguards in the constitution of India and Burma, at page 361 of your Memorandum you have laid down two conditions. The first is the provision for definite and adequate safeguards against discrimination in any form, on grounds of race or religion, and secondly you say :—" Another form of " discrimination against which definite provision is " essential is the reservation to any one section of " the community of the right to carry on any " particular form of commercial activity . . . " By that I presume that you want two things to be safeguarded in whatever constitution is given ; one is the safeguarding of persons, irrespective of race or religion, and the other is the safeguarding against any discrimination and reservation to any one section of any particular form of commercial activity ?—Yes.

62. As regards the safeguarding of race or religion, I may just point out to you one statement in your own Memorandum. In paragraph 27 (page 361) you say :— " Already Burman politicians have passed legislation " (which, however, subsequently failed to receive the " assent of the Governor-General in Council) of " which the result whould have been to restrict the " immigration into Burma of the Indian labour upon " which the prosperity of the country largely depends. " Any measure of this description should be excluded " by provisions in the constitution." Was your body opposed to the Sea Passengers' Tax Bill ?—Yes.

63. You think that the Sea Passengers' Tax Bill was forced upon the Government by the Burmese opinion here ? What was the origin of it ? How was it that the Government sponsored that Bill ?—I believe it was a Government Bill intended to increase the revenue.

64. You yourself pointed out that it was a Bill which was vetoed by the Governor-General and the result of the Bill would have been to restrict the immigration into Burma of Indian coolies. Do you not think that would have crippled the industrial activity in Burma and that it was not good for Burma itself ?—It was a bad Bill.

65. And you might have other bad Bills of that character ?—Yes.

66. And therefore you as commercial men would desire that whatever constitution is given, there must be a sufficient safeguard against repetitions of actions of this character ?—Yes.

67. Now about the Europeans controlling the minerals, timber, and so on. You said that you have about 25 per cent. of control of paddy . . . ?—Not control exactly.

68. I think you meant that it passes through the mills owned by Europeans ?—Yes.

69. In whose hands is the other 75 per cent. ?—Burmans, Chinese and Indians.

70. Can you tell us what percentage is in the hands of the Burmans, the Chinese and the Indians ?—I cannot say.

71. In the case of minerals and timber you have the largest share of it ?—Yes.

72. And who have got the balance ?—Burmans, Indians, and Chinese.

73. So far as your experience of Burma is concerned, do you think that the immigration of Indians to Burma has been conducive to the development of Burma, or has it not been ?—Yes, it has been.

74. I find in the Memorandum of the Burma for Burmans League, it is stated, on page 388 (I wish to read it to you, and that, of course, has been repeated by one of the protagonists of the separation movement) : " Let us consider now the economic " problem of the country. It requires every year about " 25 crores, two hundred and fifty million rupees, to " finance the cultivators for cultivating their lands, " as there is no State-aid system in Burma. The " Natukotta Chettiyar (money lenders) from Southern " India come over here solely to lend money on " interest ; not at 5 or 7 per cent. per annum, but " from 18 to 60 per cent. and even more than that " in certain cases. These financiers also take away " nearly about 2½ crores—25 millions—as interest. " These moneys are never spent in Burma, but only " in India. Again, the weekly remittance to such " places from Burma by Indian wage-earners, " labourers, etc., amount to Rs100 lakhs per year. " Now, what do we get in return from India for these " large sums so taken away ? Echo answers, what ? " Do you think that is a correct statement ? Instead of echo, you answer ?—I think the man from India is a very good labourer.

75. And he is necessary for the development of the country ?—That is so.

76. As regards separation, you have said on page 361 : " If your Commission can find means of " removing these disabilities " (that is to say, the disabilities which you complain of, namely, that you want more money for the development of your province and that there should be a more equitable adjustment between the Central and Provincial revenues) " whilst Burma remains a part of the " Indian Empire, commercial opinion . . . will be " satisfied " ?—Yes.

77. Then you say : " But in case it is not found " possible, this Chamber can see no alternative " but to press for the separation of Burma from " India, an alternative which the section of the " Commercial community already favours." Supposing there was a financial expert Commission commanding the confidence of all business men, including yourself ; supposing one of your representatives is placed on this Commission, one from the Central Government and one from the Government of Burma, to thrash out the whole problem in a purely commercial spirit, and they came to the conclusion that Burma was not being over-taxed or was not making a larger contribution to the upkeep of the Central Government, would you not then be satisfied and not press for separation ?—We will not press for it.

78. Sir Hari Singh Gour : Yes. You are only using separation as a lever to a better adjustment of financial relation between yourself and India ?—I may put the pros and cons for separation as the Chamber sees them. If I might elaborate the views we have expressed, we see that if India is to be granted Dominion Home Rule, Burma would like to be separated. We see that the control by Indian officials of pure Indian extraction is not accepted unanimously by the Burmans. We see that Burma's agricultural needs at the present moment are suffering. On the other hand, we believe in the maxim : " Unity is strength," and fear anti-Indian legislation. We think that the prosperity of this province very largely depends on a free flow of Indian labour into this province and on free trade with India. If the disabilities which we have referred to in our Memorandum are removed and sufficient constitutional safeguards are provided, we would prefer to remain a part of India.

79. The point is this : At present your complaint is not against the Dominion India, but against the British India ; all the complaints that you have made as regards the unfair treatment of Burma by India is not by the Dominion India, but by the British India. What reasons have you to believe that a self-governing India would not be very much better than the bureaucratic India and that it would not pacify the people ?—(No answer).

80. The Chairman : Was the tariff on steel supported by the majority of the elected members of the Legislative Assembly ?

Sir Hari Singh Gour : Yes.

81. The Chairman : Was the export duty on hides supported by the majority of the elected members of the Legislative Assembly ?

Sir Hari Singh Gour : I do not think it was.

82. Lord Burnham : It was forced by the Government of India ?—Yes, against the wish of the Assembly. They were all Bills moved by the Government of India on the report of the Tariff Board.

83. The Chairman : I do not suppose that anyone can devise a Constitution for India in which new taxes could be proposed except on the authority of the Government. But the question is whether there was a majority ?

Sir Hari Singh Gour : I am not sure.

Sir Arthur Froom : It was a very controversial measure. The Steel Bill, I think, went through a big majority.

84. Sir Hari Singh Gour : In answer to a question from my friend on the other side, you have said that Burman opinion on the question of separation is divided. There are those who say that if Burma is isolated there would be no political advance and, therefore, we must remain joint and not separate, just now. And there are those who say we must separate. The reason that the non-separatists or the unionists, as I might call them, give is that they might be isolated and they may not get the political advance they want. But what is the reason that the separatists give ?—As I said before, Burma would be unanimous in favour of separation if India were to be granted Dominion Home Rule, and the main reason for that is that the Burman does not accept willingly the control of Indian officials of pure Indian extraction. I do not think the Burmans collectively like Indians.

85. But do you not think that the Indian official is necessary for the sake of efficiency ?—Not necessarily.

86. What is the view of the Chamber as regards Indian officials being sent over here ?—We have had only a very few of them.

The Chairman : I think the point is quite clear. The view of the witness is that if the Central Government of India was completely in the hands of the majority of India and, if as a result of that, the administrators were Indians, Burma would not accept that position.

Sir Hari Singh Gour : It is a hypothetical case that you are putting forward.

The Chairman : But it is a material observation to make if you are contemplating Dominion Status.

87. Sir Sankaran Nair : You know (and if you do not know, you may take it from me) that the administration of local self-governing bodies like municipalities, district boards, and similar institutions, have suffered in India from lack of funds ; they have not been able to carry on the administration satisfactorily because funds were not forthcoming. I see from the reports that this is the case in Burma, too. Take it from me, also, that while the administration was in the hands of the officials they placed roads and communications first, education next, and health last of all. After the control was handed over to the transferred departments it is just the other way. I am only showing that there is a direct conflict of opinion between Indians and officials in that respect. They are now spending as much money as they can upon health first, education next, and roads and communications last. If, therefore, the authority goes back to the bureaucracy the native apprehension is that the result would be just the same ; that due provision will not be made for health out of the funds available ; it will not be utilised for education, but that more money will be spent on roads and communications. In Burma, too, I find it is just the same ; that is, the district boards have been spending more money on health ; next, education, then comes the public works. In fact, there is scarcely any increase in expenditure on public works. I can give you references ; see page 441 of Part IV of the Government Memorandum.* " The total expenditure on Medical Services " increased from Rs4.16 lakhs, in 1923–24 to Rs " 6.74 lakhs, in 1926–27. . . ." Now, in view of that and a possible conflict on that point which exists, would you advocate a return to bureaucratic control again ? I understood you to say that there must be more control in the hands of somebody at headquarters. I accept the control if it is in relation to the mechanical part of it, to the recovery of revenue and so on, but for myself, I oppose that if it will interfere with the policy of the District Councils or District Boards or Municipalities. With reference to that, have you got any observations to make ? —(Mr. Wroughton) No, we have no observations to make.

The Chairman : It is a very interesting observation which Sir Sankaran makes on the figures. I look at it from that point of view. I may say at once that it may well be that there has been a change because there has been stringency, but when I speak of our own ideas in England and the Central Government keeping control, I do not mean that the Central Government defines what the money is to be spent on, but it rather maintains a certain standard of administration.

Lord Burnham : May I draw Sir Sankaran's attention to part IV, page 441* in which it says : " Little interest is evinced by District Councils in " matters of sanitation and public health." That is a reflection on the attitude of the general public.

Sir Sankaran Nair : You will find what I have stated on page 441* ; and then comes the next one about water supply.

88. The Chairman : You are referring more particularly to " medical " ?—(Sir Sankaran Nair) Yes.

89. Sir Zulfiqar Ali Khan : In your statement you have stated that you would not advocate the policy of transferring Law and Order to a minister ? —(Mr. Cristall) Yes.

90. I should like to know your sentiment and your experience with regard to the working of other departments under the ministers. Are you satisfied with the administration of these departments ?— I am not prepared to say either way. We have no reason to be dissatisfied. In recent years the Government has functioned a little slower than usual, but otherwise we have got no real complaints. We are not prepared to say whether we are satisfied or dissatisfied.

91. If you are not dissatisfied, you are not satisfied either ?—No.

92. What is your precise attitude ?—We have not as a body come greatly into contact with the Government.

93. What are your hopes for the future ? Would you, for example, look forward to Burma under the administration of these ministers, knowing the Burmese as you do, with hope and satisfaction, supposing Burma is separated from India. For the sake of argument, let us assume that. Then, Burma would be under the control of the ministers. Do you look forward to it with satisfaction ?

Sir Hari Singh Gour : They will not be here then.

Sir Zulfiqar Ali Khan : What do you say ?

The Witness (Mr. Hawison) : We do not know how things would be under the conditions then obtaining.

The Chairman : The future is always a little uncertain, is it not ?

Sir Hari Singh Gour : They look forward with misgivings.

94. Sir Zulfiqar Ali Khan : I understand that most of the important departments of trade are now in the hands of Europeans, Indians, and the Chinese. The Burmese have, perhaps, a very insignificant share. In regard to the export trade the Burmese have very little share ?—Yes, very little.

95. Then, with regard to the government of the country, you are very doubtful, and with regard to trade and commerce you say that the Burmese have very little to do; that they are merely producers. Then, supposing Burma is separated from India, in what way will the Burmese control their own destiny ?—(Mr. Wroughton) If separated the Burmese would be controlling the Government very largely.

96. You, yourself, are very doubtful about the Government. And with regard to trade, the Burmese have very little share. So what do the Burmese get ?—I do not quite follow your question.

97. Sir Hari Singh Gour: What he means is this. Can you, speaking for the Burmese, say what advantage will it be to the Burmese if Burma is separated from India ?—It is largely a matter of national pride.

98. And no profit ?—(No answer).

Sir Hari Singh Gour: The thing I was going to say, sir, was this. When I referred to British India and Dominion Status in India I was dealing with the distribution of funds. The Legislature has been complaining, and complaining bitterly, that the funds that the Government of India raise are not evenly distributed. If we get Dominion Status we will stand by you and give you better justice than you have been receiving from the present Government of India. That is what I mean.

Mr. R. K. HARPER, I.C.S., called and examined.

99. The Chairman: You are the Collector of Rangoon.—Yes.

100. We were told that you might be able to give us a little information as to how elections are really conducted here. I have only just two or three questions to put. A description was given to us, more particularly in reference, I think, to municipal elections here, suggesting that at any rate the coolie vote was not always very accurately tendered. It was suggested that a coolie came in and handed in a name but it was not necessarily his own name, and so forth. I wish you to tell us whether you think elections in Rangoon have worked reasonably well from that point of view or whether you think there is a good deal to be improved ?—I think there have been cases where coolies came and voted under false names, but I do not think the cases have been very many. In the last elections which were held in November we had a few complaints of coolies getting into the booths and being unable to substantiate their names or their fathers' names. There were one or two instances in one or two Indian polling booths. When these cases occurred we asked questions, and unless satisfactory answers were given the man was not allowed to vote, but a tendered vote was recorded for him.

101. I do not quite understand how the thing in fact works. In the ordinary way does the presiding officer know the coolie personally before he comes in ?—No, that is not possible. Clerks are appointed, and it is the duty of these clerks to question the men and satisfy themselves as far as possible as to identification.

102. I am sure it is, but I want to know how such a thing can be done. How can you satisfy yourself as to the identity of a man if you do not know his name ? How is it done ?—The only thing you can ask is where he lives and one or two other questions in order to try and substantiate that he has a true claim.

103. A man may come in and declare that he is somebody else. What is the check ?—The only check is that you have to press him in hope of his forgetting something with which you can catch him. That is about the best that can be done under the existing conditions.

104. It is rather a test of memory largely ?—It is more a test of memory in the case of the mass of the coolies. If they have a good memory they can carry it off several times successfully; if they have a bad memory they will be caught.

105. I do not suppose you have experience of elections in any other place ? The only experience I have had is in Rangoon.

106. Does the system work fairly efficiently on the whole ?—I think considering all the circumstances it is about the best that can be done at present. As long as you have a lot of uneducated people who are not able to stand up for their own opinions, and have only a mass feeling of what is right or wrong, I think this is bound to happen, and I cannot think of any particular way of overcoming it.

107. Mr. Hartshorn: Have you seen anything of this kind happen at an election ? It frequently happens that before the poll opens the candidate in control of the coolie vote, or his agent, surrounds the entrance to the polling booth with a lot of labourers who have been instructed to keep out anyone not belonging to his own particular class. Does that kind of thing occur at elections ?—I came across two instances where complaints were made to me when I visited the polling booths at the last election that, because there were some persons outside they could not get into the booths, that the other party was crowding them out, but I found it impossible to verify it. It might not have been due to that at all, but to the keenness of the two or three parties who were trying to get the votes for their candidates. It may not be due to pre-arrangement.

108. But are any steps taken to prevent that kind of thing happening ?—Steps were taken by providing police and trying to clear the booths and to keep them (the crowd) as far away from the doors as possible; but when you have a seething crowd filling the whole street it is exceedingly difficult to do anything.

109. Mr. Rafi: Although the tellers may not know the voters, is it not a fact that the workers of the candidates know them ?—The candidates appoint their agents in each booth and it is the duty of these agents to assist and to identify the men, but, if the agents are dishonest, I do not think that it is an additional check. If they are honest it is an additional check.

Mr. Rafi: I just wanted to point out this, that the candidates have their own men there, men who are considered to be in a position to recognise or identify the voters.

110: The Chairman: I suppose each candidate has only one man there ?

Mr. Rafi: We generally have ten or twelve, and at times we have a crowd of people waiting there to detect any cases of personation.

111. The Chairman: Do you mean inside the polling-booth ?

Mr. Rafi: No, outside.

112. The Chairman: How do you detect in the crowd outside a case of personation ? How is it done ?

Mr. Rafi: In front of the booth, at the entrance you generally find people holding up cards of various colours belonging to the different candidates contesting a particular constituency. Now, we have got our men there at the place where these crowds assemble to see whether anyone who is not entitled to vote is coming in to vote or not, or whether he is holding a card to which he is not entitled. For instance, we take a particular street, say the Merchant Street. We have got one or two from Merchant Street watching our interests at the booth, to see whether anybody is there who is not entitled to vote.

113. The Chairman : Ten or twelve people employed by a particular candidate outside the polling-booth to try and prevent that ?

Mr. Rafi : As far as possible to try and detect cases of personation.

114. Whenever the workers detect any cases of personation, they draw the attention of the Presiding Officer to such cases ?—In the first place, the people you have mentioned stay outside the booths. They are non-officials and have absolutely nothing to do with the officials.

115. Probably they are supposed to help the election agents or the candidates ?—Candidates have their own agents officially inside the booth. Their number is strictly limited.

116. The Chairman : How many ?—One each. What happens outside is quite unofficial. It is very difficult to check these people. If any election agent discovers anything wrong he would be listened to and his case recorded if it were reported to the Presiding Officer.

117. Mr. Rafi : When reports are made of cases of personation, you take steps immediately ?—Yes.

118. The Chairman : What sort of steps ?—The man is brought up and examined, and the Presiding Officer after enquiry comes to the conclusion whether the complaint is genuine or not.

119. Mr. Rafi : Do you know that each agent has got several workers, even ten or twelve, studying the interest of the candidates and trying their best to detect cases of personation.

The Chairman : It is the most depressing thing that I have heard, if it is the case that a candidate has to furnish himself with ten or twelve men for expressly trying to prevent personation. If that were so, then cases of personation must be rampant.

Mr. Rafi : But very few succeed in personating.

120. The Chairman : In the course of an election, how many dozens of cases are successfully stopped, you think, by this army ?

Mr. Rafi : The very fact that there are persons outside to watch makes it very difficult for them to get into the booth, and the result is that only very few of them are able to personate.

121. The Chairman : I do not know if any one of you, gentlemen, wants to add anything to what Mr. Harper has told us. For myself, I should have thought that the situation was a very difficult one to deal with, and I quite sympathise both with the candidates and with the officials who are doing their best to prevent it.

The Witness (Dr. Murray) : I can give you, sir, an instance which happened only the other day when a lorry-load of coolies from one street, all of them genuine voters, was brought in, and they found that every one of their names had been crossed off as having already cast their votes.

122. Colonel Lane-Fox : Who found that out ?—(Dr. Murray) They came in and asked to be allowed to vote, and the man in charge found that votes had already been cast in their names.

123. The Chairman : It is a serious thing and, presumably, it was made the subject of a formal complaint ?—I believe it was.

124. As a matter of fact, Mr. Harper ought to be able to give us information about that ?—(Mr. Harper) If any complaint had been made, sir, it would have been taken up and investigated immediately, but no complaint of any sort was made regarding that. And, as far as I know, there has never been an official complaint to that effect.

The Witness (Dr. Murray) : I am not quite sure, sir, whether it was at the municipal election or the election to the Legislative Council. Of course, I know, Mr. Harper deals only with the Legislative Council election.

125. The Chairman : Is there anything which occurs to any of you gentlemen, and which you can suggest by way of improving the regulations or the rules ? We want, as far as possible, of course, to be helpful and not critical.

Mr. Rafi : We may, perhaps, adopt the employers' system of taking the thumb impressions of these labourers. Such impressions may be taken about six months before the election starts, and in case of doubt the thumb impression of both the persons whose identities are doubtful may be taken.

Memorandum submitted by the Burma for Burmans League.

NOTE.—Since writing the Memorandum and the Draft Constitution of the "Burma Free State" on behalf of the Burma for Burmans League, an All-Parties Conference was called by the Separation League for an agreed Constitution for Burma. I was deputed to attend on behalf of the Burma for Burmans League.

The Conference was held on the 12th January, 1929, at the office of U Maung Gyee, Barrister-at-Law, ex-Education Minister, to consider the Separation League Constitution entitled, "The Burma Free State."

The policy and the principles are the same as that embodied in the Draft of the Burma for Burmans League. Both are based on the Constitution of the Irish Free State. That of the Separation League is an outline in brief, whereas the Burma for Burmans Draft is an expanded one.

The many Associations that responded and that attended the Conference have accepted the "Burma Free State Constitution" of the Separation League as the basis of the agreed Constitution for Burma.

Rangoon, GEORGE H. MUNRO.
31*st January*, 1929.

PART I.

INTRODUCTORY.

A public meeting was held on Saturday, the 28th July, 1928, at the premises of the Burmese Tipitaka Publishing Company, Sule Pagoda Road, Rangoon, for the purpose of taking steps to advance Burma in view of the Statutory Commission appointed under Section 84A of the Government of India Act, visiting Burma on the 29th January, 1929, for inquiring into the working of the system of Government, the growth of education, and the development of representative institutions in Burma, and matters connected therewith; to report as to whether and to what extent it is desirable to establish the principle of responsible Government, then existing in Burma, including the question whether the establishment of a Second Chamber of the local legislature is or is not desirable and on any other matter affecting British India referred to the Commission by His Majesty.

U Ba Sein, T.P.S., Statistical Officer, Burma Railways, was voted to the chair.

After discussion, the meeting decided to form a League to be known as the "Burma for Burmans League," with the following objects:—

(1) To work for the progress and prosperity of the Burmese people.
(2) To make every effort by Constitutional means to secure for Burma the status of a self-governing country on the lines of Ireland, Canada, or South Africa, or in other words, Dominion Home Rule Status.

The meeting considers that the pressing political problem is to get Burma immediately separated from India and regards that this should be an object which the League should specially carry out.

It was decided that membership would be opened to all Burmans of both sexes: those born in Burma and are able to read and write Burmese; those not born in Burma but are able to read and write Burmese and have decided to settle down in Burma for life and acquire Burmese domicile.

It was decided not to collect subscriptions or admission fees but to collect donations for the purpose of raising a political fund.

U Ba Sein, T.P.S., and Dr. U Nyo, LL.D., were elected Patrons.

The following were elected office-bearers:—President: U Myo, A.M.P.; Vice-President: U Ba Saw; Honorary Secretaries: Saya Shwe, Manager, Tipitaka Publishing Company; Mg. Pan Maung, Manager, Thudhammawaddy Press; Honorary Treasurer: U Ba Maung, Proprietor, Swezonkyawdin Pitaka Press; Auditor: Saya Sein, Manager, Burma Oil Company.

The elected Committee members are:—U Po Thein, U Ba Pe Latt, U Cassim, U Ba Thi, U Tun Lin, U Tun Nyun, U Po Yin, U Set, U Po Pe, U Thein Pe and Mr. George H. Munro, co-opted member.

It was also decided to convene an All-Burma Mass Meeting to consider more fully, at the Jubilee Hall, the question of Separation from India.

2. The All-Burma Mass Meeting was held at the Jubilee Hall, on Sunday, the 26th August, 1928, at about 11-30 a.m. The Hall was packed, some five thousand Burmans from all parts of Burma attended, including Chinese, Indians, Europeans, Anglo-Burmans and Anglo-Indians of Rangoon. There were about thirty members on the platform. Saya Myo, Aggamahapandita, Burma, presided, Saya Shwe read a Yadu composed for the occasion.

The Chairman delivered his presidential address in Burmese. The following is a literal translation of the speech delivered.

SAYA MYO'S PRESIDENTIAL ADDRESS.

THE SEPARATION QUESTION.

Burma, radiant with the lustre of the religion of the Buddha, lavishly endowed by nature with resources of various kinds, having a climate equable and salubrious—appears as it were to attract those who had never been here before; to enchant those who come here to remain in it ever more. Capable of shining in her own glory, Burma, has therefore, become the cynosure of the world's eye as the gem that shines among the myriad precious jewels which adorn the crown of His Imperial Majesty, the King-Emperor of Great Britian and of the British Empire.

A succession of Burmese monarchs held sway over Burma till about a century ago when she passed under the sway of the King of the British people. A spell of downward luck in 1247 B.E., brought Burma under the British flag, and being attached to the Indian Empire became the grazing ground of the Indians. Just as the bright and glorious sun illuminating the world for a while, sinks slowly into the western horizon, in like manner Burma has suffered, since the day she lost her King. It may be said by cursory onlookers that the country has progressed and prospered; that her population had increased and multiplied; but those living in the country, priest and laymen alike, having become the victims of the "Five Laws of Destruction," have undergone mental miseries and deep anxieties like unto that of a cane heated in the fire. That is a matter indeed, for the deepest regret.

FIVE KINDS OF DESTRUCTION.

The law comprising the "five kinds of destruction" are (1) Nyartibyasana: The danger which causes complete extinction of the whole family and relatives; (2) Bhogabyasana: The danger which causes the loss of ancestral property leaving one penniless; (3) Rogabyasana: The danger which works against freedom from illness and disease, and against decrease in deaths and also against the increase in the race; (4) Silabyasana: The danger which works against a man's good conduct and right living; (5) Ditthibyasana: The danger which works to the destruction of the religion which explains the true cause and the true effect.

Burma is suffering from these five kinds of destruction and those moaning and wailing are the sons of the soil. And searching for those responsible for bringing on Burma these five kinds of destructions, many learned in political wisdom have definitely placed the charge against India with her 300 millions of population. They have so decided, and have declared that as time goes on no trace of Burma would be left and moreover that the Burmese Nation would become extinct. The statement made by the Honourable Mr. V. J. Patel, President of the Indian Legislative Assembly, who came here about 20 days ago, that there is no such place as Burma, is worthy of consideration.

The words of the wise, the decisions of the learned in this respect are so true as to be irrefutable. And the reason? Burma with her paltry 13 millions of people having been joined to India with her 300 millions of people, and being placed under the power and authority of India, an innumerable number of the poorer Indians, of an alien faith, or a foreign race, flock to Burma unceasingly. Consequently, the proportion of Indians to the sons of the soil being twenty to one, they have to jostle with each other, impairing the purity of the indigenous race. The danger of race extinction is thus upon us and the statement that the Burmese, as a nation, would soon disappear is true.

And how comes about the danger which causes the loss of property leaving the people penniless, affect the Burmese? Indians come to Burma in increasing numbers year after year and have snatched away from the hands of the people the work and the industries of the indigenous population; and moreover the Central Government takes away over ten crores of rupees yearly. For these reasons, the people of the country are being daily deprived of their wealth and property and are being reduced to a state of poverty.

And again, a poverty stricken people such as ours cannot strive to secure public health, nor can the Government spend lavishly to gain the same object. Consequently, the danger due to disease and sickness has fallen on Burma.

Further, however much a poverty stricken people such as ours may desire to practice faithfully our religion, as becomes Buddhists they are reduced to the level of, to quote the saying, "In affliction even a mother can rarely claim a son as her own offspring." So, they are compelled to commit evil deeds. Consequently the danger due to lack of good conduct has fallen on Burma.

Then also the religion of a people impoverished by being linked to India is day by day decaying and on Burma has fallen the danger regarding the destruction of the religion.

I am sure that all are convinced that these great dangers have fallen on Burma.

I am advocating the separation of Burma from India not because I desire to prevent Indians from coming to this country or staying in this country, but because, in reality, I wish to stem the oncoming tide of the danger of the disruption of our religion and of the extinction of our nation, as well as to get whatever concessions we can to counter the disadvantages Burma is placed under by her connection with India.

It is a matter for the deepest gratification that for the past many years, lovers of the nation, lovers of the country, men and women alike, including the Sanghas, have striven hard, by working both outside and inside the Legislatures, to raise the status of the country and the people. I take this opportunity of thanking all those who, actuated by the purest of motives, have been and are still working for the welfare of the country.

I have not, in the past, taken a prominent part in politics and have been content only with remaining in the background as a general helper. But now, public interest in "politics," the haven of victory, to reach which all are striving, has not yet been gained. Meanwhile lovers of the nation, devotees of the religion tired in their limbs, have been reduced to the condition of "neither on a sandbank nor the tide following out." That being so, in consultation with some of those who like myself have an affection for the nation and for the religion, I have started this "Burma for Burmans League." And our members, each assisting in their own way, and shouting out "yo-hee-lay" are pushing their barge of politics forward to make it reach its destination and are determined to bring this idea of "separation" to a successful issue.

THEN AND NOW: A COMPARISON.

In the olden days, the work done by the head of a family sufficed not only for the wants of the family but when with the parents the older children joined in the work, it not only enabled them to clothe and feed the whole family decently, they were also able to buy and dress themselves in beautiful clothes, adorn themselves in gold, silver and jewellery. And over and above that they could sow the seed of merit incurring benefits thereby—the good deed of building zayats and tazaungs, pyatthats, setting up temples of all kinds. In the olden days paddy, rice, oil, salt, foodstuffs such as fowls, pork and fish do not cost what it costs us now. In matters of health, though there did not exist such things as a Health Department or big hospitals as at present, epidemics were rare occurrences in the old days. There were no such things as doctors, and in the event of illness curative measures were undertaken with the help of domestic remedies as those recorded by our forefathers; there where no such things as doctors' bills. In the event of serious illness cure was affected by physicians who through their proficiency had been recognized by the King as "Thamadaws" (Court physicians) or by those similarly competent without so much even an expense as could be spoken of or written down.

Nowadays, not to say anything of maintenance during illness but for maintenance during health, money has to be drawn from a very deep "rupee mine." The work done by the head of a family does not suffice for the upkeep of the family, and even when the whole household, including the children, take a hand in the work, in most cases neither food nor raiment is sufficient. That is the reason why parents have had to withdraw their children from schools as soon as they are able to distinguish between "a letter which conveys the news of death and one which conveys the news of (someone) being alive," i.e., able to read and write. This is the reason why they cannot themselves, as becomes good Buddhists, faithfully adhere to the practice of the religion, and the safeguarding of their nation.

INCREASED EXPENDITURE AND TAXATION.

Not to say of the old times—when we consider the events of the past 20 years, we find an increase yearly in the number of crimes, such as thefts, dacoities, rapes, etc., due to lack of self-control, crimes arising out of drink, crimes due to lack of the lobe, such as murder. Owing to these, we find an increase yearly in the expenditure on police and according to the Police Administration report for 1925–26 the expenditure was nearly 104 lakhs and that in 1926–27 rose to 112 lakhs.

The reports on the prison administration show an increase in the jail population. Considering that, according to the Report of 1926–27, the number convicted under 30 years of age was 70 per cent. and the number convicted under 21 years of age was 30 per cent. no right thinking person would deny that people are losing their moral tone. The expenditure incurred in connection with the prison department in 1925–26 is over 20 lakhs and for 1926–27, 22 lakhs, I shall not take up your time by dilating on the matters relating to the administration of justice, etc.

For this increasing expenditure, the burden has fallen on the already impoverished Burmese people. A large amount of revenue has been obtained from Burma in the shape of customs, income-tax, capitation tax, thathamedha tax, land revenue, forest revenue, ferries and fisheries, minerals (including petroleum), posts and telegraphs, stamp revenue, etc., and so it is proper to ask that the increased expenditure be not made the responsibility of the poor indigenous population. What has happened is that the revenues derived from central subjects in the above mentioned sources are not permitted to be spent in Burma.

BURMA'S TRIBUTE TO INDIA.

The cream of income from these sources is taken out and a yearly tribute amounting to over a thousand lakhs has to be paid to India. Moreover, 64 lakhs from the remaining revenue of Burma had to be contributed to the Indian Exchequer and the Government of Burma had to concert various plans to overcome the difficulty of insufficient means of expenditure in administering the country, I understand, however, that the 64 lakhs contribution has been discontinued owing to the agitation on the part of the Burma Legislature. The Government of Burma is placed in a difficult position as it would be impossible to contrive to get more taxes.

FINANCIAL CHAOS.

The state of affairs is such that imposition of further taxation would mean "cutting away the flesh." I understand that the Accountant-General who recently came here to examine the financial position of the country reported that Burma's financial affairs would be in difficulties in the near future. If we examine carefully why the expenditure and the income in Burma does not balance, it will be found that because Burma is connected with India. If the ten crores of rupees sent away to India be carried in bullock-carts, it would require 5,000 bullock-carts. If we count the numbers of years Burma had been joined on to India and the money sent to India what pangs does it not cause. And so, if Burma is separated from India, the revenues realised from Burma can be used for the purposes of improving everything in Burma and in about ten years Burma would attain the stage of prosperity as to entitle her to the name of "Shwepyigyi" or "Golden Burma." The "tribute" sent to India in the shape of customs duties is like that of a cruel dacoit or robber ill-treating the inmates of a house. Nor do I think it would be wrong to compare the collection of income-tax and super-tax with that of Bilus (ogres) cruelly ill-treating and sucking the blood (of a man). In the past, district officers performed the duties of income-tax officers in addition to their own duties. In order, however to increase the taxes a separate department has been established. Fearing these Bilus (Ogres) in the shape of income and super taxes a number of chetties closed down their firms in Burma and taking away 40 crores of rupees have gone to Saigon in Cochin China under the French to set up business there. In Saigon, payment of 250 silver dollars a year enables one to set up as moneylender without further payment of any other taxes. The fact that these chetties have taken away 400 lakhs of rupees from Burma and the fact that more chetties have gone and are going away, makes one think that the money market is going to become tighter. Singapore which is not under the control of India, but directly under the British Government, introduced income-tax during the Great War owing to shortage of money, but discontinued these taxes when the war was over. Then again customs duties being lower than in Burma, gave relief to the people in several respects.

THE MILCH COW.

Burma may therefore be likened to a milch cow and the Central Board of Revenue in India to a clever Indian milkman. For several years past, the Indian milkman milked Rs. 1,000 lakhs worth of milk from the Burma milch cow, and fed his wife and children, the Indian people. As for the owner of the cow—the people of Burma, he feels no pity and we do not even have so much as a drop of milk on the tip of our tongues, and when we consider this, is that not a matter for regret? It is only when we separate the cow from the milkman that we can free ourselves from poverty. I am sure that all will realise the advantages to be derived by the separation of Burma from India. At the worst, we can make use of the 1,000 lakhs for the various departments in Burma. We can spend more on education. As the Thathameda Tax and Capitation Tax amounted to only Rs. 100 lakhs, these can be totally abolished. We shall be able to get our goods cheaper by the reduction of customs duties, and we can even raise a fund for work to get the continued glory of our religion.

In conclusion, I beg that all patriots in Burma would with one voice ask the Simon Commission to separate Burma from India and grant to Burma Dominion Home Rule.

3. The following agenda of the business before the meeting was then gone through. The speeches and the resolutions thereon, duly proposed and seconded and supported were all in Burmese, as briefly detailed below in English:

THE AGENDA.

1. That Burma shall be entirely and immediately separated from India and granted Dominion Home Rule.
2. That all candidates who stood in "B" list of the tenth standard be admitted into the University of Rangoon.
3. That private candidates be allowed to appear for the I.A. and B.A. examinations.
4. To support and recommend the resolutions passed by the failed third grade pleadership candidates.
5. That a Bill be introduced for regulating control of Sanghas (Hpongyees) and that Government be approached for the purpose.
6. To define the meaning of the word "Burman."
7. That a Committee be appointed to carry out the resolutions passed.
8. That resolution 1 shall be sent to the Viceroy, the Simon Commission, the Governor of Burma and the Secretary of State for India.
9. That meetings shall be held and encouragement be given for purposes of resolution 1 in all parts of Burma.
10. To consider any other business.

PLEA FOR SEPARATION OF BURMA FROM INDIA.

3. The first and most important resolution, viz., "That Burma shall be entirely and immediately separated from India and granted Dominion Home Rule," was moved by U Mya U, F.R.G.S., Barrister-at-law, Mandalay. He put forward a strong plea in Burmese for separation of Burma from India. The translation into English of what he said is:

The memorable Declaration made on the 20th August, 1927, by the Secretary of State for India sets forth inter alia, that the policy of His Majesty's Government with which the Government of India are in complete accord, is that of increasing association of Indians (and Burmans) in every branch of the administration and the gradual development of India (and Burma) as a self-governing institution by progressive realization of responsible Government, as an integral part of the British Empire; that substantial steps in that direction would be taken as soon as possible; that it is of the highest importance as a preliminary to considering what these steps should be and that there should be a free and informal interchange of opinion between those in authority at Home and in India and Burma.

It is most significant that the war in which all the greatest nations of the world were involved was responsible for the memorable announcement aforesaid by the British Parliament and new issues have been brought home to India and Burma, awakening a sense of nationalism stirring in the hearts of everyone not only in India and Burma but the whole world; and Burma shares this in common with all other lands. For the first time in the history of the Indian Empire, the Secretary of State for India (the Right Honourable Mr. Montagu) came out to India personally to receive from the people of India (and Burma) a statement of what was stirring then in their hearts. Delegates from Burma were sent out to Calcutta and they were commissioned by the Burmese people in general to ask for, among other things (1) the separation of Burma from India; (2) that the status of Burma be raised and provision made for the establisment of a Governor, High Court and University; (3) that the increasing demand for education be liberally met; (4) that the larger share of administrative positions be given to Burmans; and (5) that a new scheme of Self-Government be devised for Burma. After discussion and deliberation between the people of India and Burma and those in authority at Home, the British Parliament was pleased to grant them (India and Burma) the present dyarchical form of Government.

I may mention here that Burma was firstly omitted in the Joint Report of the Right Honourable Mr. Montagu, the Secretary of State for India, and Lord Chelmsford, the Viceroy, when dealing with the Government of India Bill. We have to thank the Burma Deputation, consisting of Messrs. U. Pu, U Ba Pe, and the late U Tun Shein, and U Thein Maung, M.A., LL.B., for having proceeded to England and secured, with the assistance of Mr. Bernard Houghton, I.C.S., retired, and some members of Parliament, equal Reforms for Burma with other Provinces of India.

This form of Government has now been tried in both the countries, and so far as Burma is concerned, I venture to say that it has only met with partial success. Hence the agitation for a further substantial measure of reforms by the people of Burma. The Indian Statutory Commission has now come out to gather first-hand information from us in accordance with the promise made by Parliament, and invited the submission of written statements touching the structure and working of the existing constitution of British India including Burma, and returned to England. This Commission, when it comes back next cold season will, I hold, undoubtedly be the forerunner in shaping the destiny of the Burmese nation; and creation, therefore, of agitation against it will only have evil effects tantamount to political suicide by Burma. In my humble opinion, political leaders have a great responsibility to try to create a calm atmosphere at this psychological moment and make out a strong case for Burma before the Commission which represents the various parties in the British Parliament.

I would now beg to state my views. When we speak of India and the Indians, Burma and its people are always included, because Burma is attached to the Indian Empire as a Province of India. History tells us that Burma became part of the Indian Empire through the political accident of its geographical position at the time of its annexation, because it was then found that Burma could not be directly and efficiently controlled from England, as India was nearer. It was therefore administered through the Indian Government as a matter of convenience.

We Burmans, as a race, had our own kings continuously before the advent of the British, for more than 1,000 years, and are proud of our own race as every nation has its racial pride. Lower Burma was annexed about eighty and Upper Burma forty years ago. We have one race (Burman), one language (Burmese), one religion (Buddhism), one ideal, and one style of dress without any caste or distinction, while our manners and customs have remained free of diversity. Since the annexation there has been an inrush of non-Burmese races into our land. Out of a population of 13,000,000 people, there are 3,000,000 of foreign races, that is, 2,500,000 Indians and 500,000 of all other races. Of this 3,000,000, let us assume that 2,000,000 have been absorbed into the Burmese nation by marriage, lawfully or otherwise, with Burmese Buddhist women. The issues of such union could not ipso facto be pure Burmese, and the religious faith of such children would be non-Buddhist, as the children generally follow the religion of their fathers. Practically, we have now only 10,000,000 who can be called Burmans. This number includes the indigenous races of Burma, such as Shans, Karens and Kachins. So, within an average period of sixty years of British Rule in Burma, if Burma could possess 3,000,000 people of non-Burmese races professing non-Buddhist faith, what would be, by calculating arithmetically, the population of the non-Burmans in another 200 years? It will, I dare say, become equal to the population of Burma at the advent of the British, when the number of foreigners was infinitesimally small. Every year, besides other foreign races, about four lakhs of people from the other side of the Bay of Bengal (India) come into Burma and return to their homes, carrying away with them large sums of money, leaving behind about 60,000 of their comrades. Fixing roughly at a nominal figure of Rs. 100 per head as the amount taken away by each of them, it comes to 34,000,000 rupees. To this must be added the sum of money taken away by other races jointly, which could also not be less than 34,000,000. From this it will be seen that Burma is deprived of 68,000,000 rupees every year.

Let us now consider the economic problem of the country. It requires, every year, about twenty-five crores (250,000,000) to finance the cultivators for cultivating their lands, as there is no State-aid system in Burma. The Natukotta Chettiyar money-lenders from Southern India, come over here solely to lend money on interest, not at five or seven per cent. per annum, but from eighteen to sixty per cent. and even more than that in certain cases. These financiers also take away about two and a half crores, 25,000,000 as interest. These moneys are never spent in Burma but only in India. Again, the weekly remittance to such places from Burma by Indian wage earners (labourers, etc.), amounts to Rs. 100 lakhs per year. Now, what do we get in return from India for these large sums so taken away? Echo answers what? Now I come to the question of Burma's revenue obtained in Burma. It amounts approximately to twenty-two crores of rupees (220,000,000). Our poor Burmese cultivators contribute largely towards it. Out of which eleven crores is the share that goes to India annually and 340 lakhs are spent in the maintenance of the North-Western Frontier of India. From this it will be seen that India takes Rs. 50 on every Rs. 100 of Burma's revenue. Burma needs a great deal of improvements in various branches of administration. Take Education, Irrigation, Communications, etc. These departments are simply starved.

According to the legislatures established in Burma (and India) there are two kinds of subjects, i.e., subjects normally to be dealt with by the Government of India, and provincial subjects, that is, subjects normally to be dealt with by the Government of Burma. Central subjects include matters of imperial as distinguished from provincial importance and matters in which uniformity throughout the Indian Empire is to be most desirable. The central subjects are chiefly foreign affairs, relations with Native States, the Public Debt, Currency, Shipping, Customs Patents, Designs, Copyrights, etc. Provincial subjects are again sub-divided into Reserved and Transferred, the former being dealt with by the Governor-in-Council, the latter with the Governor acting with Ministers. Amongst the Reserved subjects are included Irrigation, Land Revenue, Administration of Justice, Police and Prisons. Transferred subjects include Local Self-Government, Medical Administration, Public Health, Education, Public Buildings and Roads, Agriculture, Forests, Fisheries, Excise, Co-operative Societies. This list is not exhaustive.

Being a Burman interested in the welfare and progress of my countrymen, I have watched the rise and growth of political movements in Burma. In my humble opinion, unless Burma gets herself emancipated politically and financially, from the control of India proper, the Burmese nation can never hope to rise to the level now reached by other civilised nations of the world, and the very existence of the Burmans as a race would be threatened, choked, and finally meet with extermination in the course of a few decades. If the Burmese race is gone, its beautiful religion must follow suit. Burma's position in the Indian Empire, looked at from any point of view and under any circumstances, is quite anomalous, because it is cut off by sea from the rest of India. And in matters of race, religion, language, ideals, manners, customs, we are quite different from the other provinces of India.

The real objection raised by a certain section of the community against separation is based possibly on four main grounds :—Firstly, on a strategic point of view ; that is to say, we shall not be able to protect the long range of the North-Eastern Frontier, or in other words, we are not capable of defending our own country in case of attack. My answer to this is a total denial. Burma separated, with all its culture and refinement, wealth, actual and potential, and with overflowing revenues, is beyond all manner of doubt capable of managing her own affairs quite happily and efficiently in every respect. We are not afraid of any attack by our neighbours or by any other power. Because, though Burma does not possess a defence force and regular army of soldiers of her own, there is nothing to prevent the formation of a Burmese army ; and further, we may boldly and confidently look to the mighty British Empire when we want any kind of assistance.

It is also a matter of Imperial concern affecting the British interests in no small measure. Neither Britain nor any part of her vast Empire will remain indifferent, even if help is not sought for by Burma in her hour of trial. Otherwise, the definitions of " Imperial Idea " and " Commonwealth of Nations within the British Empire " would be meaningless. Look at the last great war as an example which has caused the Great Powers to enunciate the principle of self-determination. This principle was to be applied not only to small European nations such as the Belgians and the Jugo Slavs, but it should be applied to Burmans as well, however small they are as a nation in Asia. I would therefore emphatically say that all other Dominions within the British Empire are bound to give a helping hand to Burma when necessary. If Burma, as a separate unit of the British Empire, were in danger of being invaded, I do not for a moment imagine that India herself would remain neutral. With the advent of Aeroplanes, Imperial Airways, etc., and the Singapore Naval Base as an accomplished fact, there would be nothing to be afraid of, should such an attack materialise. If we are allowed to make use of our Revenues from our country only, we could hire trained military officers to give us training in all branches of defence. And in the course of twenty years, we shall have a regular defence army of Burmese soldiers led by British Officers. If anyone wants to know the real character of a Burman, let him kindly look at our history. He will find that we Burmans were once upon a time a nation of soldiers, and that there was a Burmese Empire under the Burmese Kings. It is an admitted fact that untrained people of whatever race are not capable of withstanding the attack of organized and disciplined forces. The training and development speaks for itself. An opportunity is all that is needed to prove the contrary. In the last world-struggle, it is a known fact that we Burmans participated by contributing men and money for the maintenance of liberty and peace in Europe, and notwithstanding the proverbial reproach of backwardness attached to the Province, we have unflinchingly gone out to help with our lives and property and share in the sacrifice without which no war has yet been won. What does it show ? It shows that we are a fit nation to be associated as a member within the British Empire.

Secondly, some of our brethren have been labouring under the fear that Burma will be converted into a Crown Colony. This apprehension cannot be brushed aside altogether as a mistaken idea. There is something in it. But, in my humble opinion, the present form of Government is already far more advanced than that of a Crown-Colonial Government and I do not think that our benign Government would be so inhuman as to make us march backwards, having already given us equal status with India.

President Wilson, and Mr. Lloyd George, our late Premier, have clearly defined the principle of self-determination. Mr. Lloyd George then stated in unmistakable terms that such a principle was to be applied not only to small European nations, but that it should be applied to other small nations also. These statements, when made by such responsible statesmen, filled the hearts of all small nations like Burma with hope for the future, and they were delighted to see that the angle of vision in the world politics had, after all, changed for the better, that the political rights of the people of small nations would henceforth be respected and that their legitimate hopes and aspirations would be fulfilled. Further, the American Government had not been slow in granting self-government to the Philippinos, who are one of the small nations under their régime, in fulfilment of their solemn declaration, although their tutelage under the American Government was not so long as the Burmans have been under the British. It was only the other day that Sir Hugh Clifford, Governor of Singapore, before relinquishing his gubernatorial office in Ceylon, most unmistakably explained his view to the Legislative Council that the policy of His Majesty's Government is not to go back. Since Sir Hugh's departure for Malaya, Lord Donoughmore, President of the Ceylon Commission, expressed the same view. For my part, however, I would like to take, so to speak, the lesser of the two evils, if there be any.

There seems to be some misconception in the minds of some of my brethren and others as to the exact significations of the terms : Colony and Crown Colony and various types of Colonial forms of Government. I may be permitted to say here that a Colony has been defined to be any part of His Majesty's Dominions exclusive of the British Isles and British India. In a Crown Colony there is no representative Government. There are two groups of these Colonies :

(1) Those in which the Crown has the sole power of legislation, which it exercises through a Governor, Commissioner, or President alone, e.g., Gibraltar, St. Helena, Labuan, Ashanti, and Basutoland.

(2) Those in which the Crown has the control of legislation, which it exercises through a Governor or Administrator assisted by Executive and Legislative Councils, composed of ex-officio or official, or partly official and partly nominated members, the Crown reserving the right of veto, e.g., Hong Kong, Trinidad, Windward Islands, Seychelles, Straits Settlements, etc. (N.B.—There are no elected members in either council).

(3) A third type of Colonial Government comprises those to which a representative legislature has been granted, but the public officers are under the control of, and responsible to, the Crown acting through the Colonial Secretary (i.e. responsible Government has not been granted). The executive is composed of a Governor and a Council appointed by the Crown, containing some ex-officio or official members. As regards the legislature in three Colonies (Bahamas, Barbadoes and Bermuda) there are two Chambers ; a Legislative Council nominated by the Crown, and an elected Legislative Assembly ; in the others (e.g. British Guiana, Jamaica, Leeward Islands, Ceylon, etc.) there is one Legislative Chamber only, composed partly of members nominated by the Crown or of ex-officio or official members and partly of elected members.

(4) The fourth and last group, consisting of Canada, Australia, South Africa, New Zealand and Newfoundland have full Responsible Government, i.e., the chief public officers or ministers are responsible as in England, primarily to the Local Legislature. There is thus a great difference between the two types of Crown Colonies on the one hand, and the two types of Self-Governing Colonies on the other,

We are now clamouring for the fourth form of Colonial Government, such as Canada, Australia and South Africa, with a full responsible government. As regards this claim, whether we are a fit nation for self-government or otherwise, the observations made about ten years ago by some responsible Statesmen, Members of Parliament and others, will be of interest.

Sir Frederic Fryer the first Lieutenant-Governor of Burma, has said: "I consider that Burma is quite as fit for responsible government as India, and Burmans are not, in religion, race or habits, in any way identical with Indians. And writing to the London Times, he expressed again that "the Burmans are fitter for local self-government than are the Indians of the agricultural classes. The women of Burma are quite capable of exercising the vote. The loyalty of Burma during the war has been most conspicuous, and when I recollect the disturbed state of the country when I first went there in 1886, I cannot but wonder at the rapidity with which our Government has overcome the antagonism to it which certainly prevailed in the early years after the annexation and which existed not only in Upper but also in Lower Burma.

"It speaks volumes for our system of Government that such a transformation should be worked so quickly, and that our enemies of early days should be converted into our firm friends and supporters. The Burmans are a very proud people and have no mean opinion of themselves, considering themselves vastly superior to Indians, and I am firmly convinced that in no circumstances would they allow themselves to be ruled by Indians if they could help it."

Sir Herbert Thirkell White, a former Lieutenant-Governor of Burma, and author of a Civil Servant in Burma, says that "If India is fit to enjoy reforms in the direction of responsible government, a point on which I express no opinion, I think that Burma is probably better fitted to do so."

Sir Reginald Craddock, another Lieutenant-Governor of Burma, though an alarmist on the point of self-government, has remarked "that there are certain elements in the Burmese people which are very suitable for a popular form of government; that in Primary Education, Burma is more advanced than India; that in the general level of intelligence amongst the masses, Burma is able to hold its own and more in any contrast with many advantages notably in respect of conditions which favour development on democratic lines; that Burma has some sort of elective system, which is by no means unknown in Burma, and there has been no extremist party of young Burmans, no unbridled and defamatory press, no signs of unrest amongst Burmese students and not even the slightest suspicion of anarchy."

He further said that "Burma is free from those acute religious dissensions, which militate against the co-operation of men of different creeds. Toleration of the scruples and prejudices of others is a ruling tenet in her religion. There is an entire absence of caste and no marked cleavages of special distinction or occupation exists. The man of humble birth has in Burma always been able to rise as high as ability and education might carry him. The emancipated condition of the Burmese women conspicuously distinguishes Burma from India, and though secondary education may be backward, nowhere in India has primary education reached so high a stage of development. And among the indigenous races, as distinct from the immigrants from China or India, the extremes both of wealth and poverty are far less marked than in any Indian Province."

Again on August 2nd, 1919, he said "there are features in the social system of Burma which mark it out as prima facie a more promising soil for the introduction of electoral institutions than can be found in India. The widely diffused primary education already mentioned, the emancipated condition of women, the freedom from violent religious antipathies, the great tolerance of the Buddhist religion, the absence of landed aristocracy, of caste distinction, and of hereditary occupations, all these are factors which tell strongly in favour of the ultimate success of democratic institutions. The great development of Co-operative Credit Societies and that of allied associations is the strongest proof that the organisation of local self-government in rural Burma has been most unduly deferred, and is one of the most pressing ones of our administration."

Sir George Scott, a high authority in Burma, in reference to Burma being left out of the Government of India Bill and placed on the same level with Baluchistan and the North-West Frontier Province, observed that "to bracket Burma with Baluchistan and the North-West Province—the most literate with the most illiterate Provinces—is simply ridiculous, and is in entire agreement with the Burmans being different as to race, religion, caste, national feeling and loyalty."

In the discussions that took place in 1919 in the House of Commons on the Government of India Bill, Colonel Wedgwood, moving an amendment, said that "he sincerely hoped that the amendment will be carried and that the Labour Party should at least secure a definite water-tight pledge that a Bill guaranteeing Burma a full measure of freedom as is proposed for India, shall be passed during the next sessions of Parliament. The Burmese are the most educated people of all India and should be granted freedom to control their own destiny." He further saw no reason why Burma should not be granted independently Dominion status, and observed that "the temptation naturally is when people do not make any complaint, to give them much less than is given to those who do complain. I do not want that to happen in this case, and we want the Burmese to understand, when they get their Constitution, that although they have not made any great demonstration on the subject, we shall realise that they are every bit as advanced as the rest of the people of India. In fact, they are even better educated in some respects, and we believe that their standard of treatment of women is better in Burma than in India. We want the Burmese people to believe that they are being treated on an equality with the rest of the British Empire. This is all the more important because people are so apt to contrast our Government of Burma with the American Government of the Philippines where they have been given self-government, and it is rather a slur upon the reputation of the British Empire that we had gone more slowly than the Americans in emancipating similar races. I hope we shall get a definite assurance that a Bill will be introduced for Burma in the next session of Parliament giving powers and no less advance than are given to the Indian Provinces."

Captain Ormsby-Gore, in defence of the Secretary of State for India, said: "I do not think that we should have Burmese in the Council of State for India. I want Burma to be kept as a separate entity; Burma is one of the leading Buddhist nations in the world and they are a very attractive people. I think we are all at one in our determination to see that Burma gets its place in the sun."

Mr. Montagu, the late Secretary of State for India, remarked that Burma does not wish to be left to the tender mercies either of the Secretary of State, the Government of India, or the Local Government, and agreed that Burma is not India, and that Burma must get an analogous grant of self-government subject to differences in the local conditions of Burma. Its literal attainments are greater than any other provinces."

We understand the meaning of the political catchward "Responsible Government," so did our Burmese Kings, who had actually tried this principle. The Burmese Kings conquered Siam, Assam, Manipur, Shan States, etc., and granted them self-government within the Burmese Empire. More than that, some section of the Burmese people are endowed with the spirit of Republican form of government. For instance, I beg to refer to Sagaing Hills in Upper Burma, where nearly 5,000 to 6,000 Buddhist monks and nuns are still exhibiting that spirit. They have their own ways of management. They are all pure Burmese, inhabiting the hills peacefully and harmoniously, and have been so for many years, from a period before the advent of the British without in the least giving cause for interference by the administrative authority. It will thus be manifest that there was a Burmese Empire before the British came here. We are Burmese Buddhists; Burma is the land of Burmese Buddhists; Buddhism is a living faith, inculcating tolerance, brotherhood, equality, democracy, self-responsibility and universal peace. The thirty-eight Rules of happiness or the Sacred Precepts called "Mangala Sutta" have been well imprinted in our heart of hearts and we have been putting them into execution. These golden rules were even taught when we were young, in schools recognised by the British Government. They are :—

(1) Not to associate with the wicked;
(2) To be always in the company of the learned and wise;
(3) To honour those to whom honour is due;
(4) To dwell in a suitable place and adapt one's self to satisfy all common wants of life;
(5) To have in store some merit acquired in former existences;
(6) To have in one's own heart right desires, eschewing evil;
(7) To possess thorough and comprehensive knowledge of the world;
(8) To acquire knowledge of arts and sciences which are free from sin;
(9) To learn the laws of "Vinya" or the rules of conduct for the monks;
(10) To speak well chosen words;
(11) To support father and mother with proper sustenance;
(12) To cherish and maintain wife and children;
(13) To follow peaceful calling, i.e., trade, business or occupation;
(14) To practise charity;
(15) To live a life of righteousness;
(16) To render help to relatives;
(17) To do things which are free from sin;
(18) To shun that which is sinful;
(19) To particularly avoid bad deeds;
(20) To abstain from all intoxicating drink;
(21) Not to fail to practise meritorious works;
(22) To show the respect to whom it is due, such as teachers, parents and the three precious gems, e.g. Buddha, Dharma and Sangha;
(23) To humble one's self before all;
(24) To be readily contented;
(25) To feel particularly grateful for one's benefactors;
(26) To hear the preaching of law from time to time;
(27) To possess virtue of patience;
(28) To readily take to heart the admonition of the learned and wise;
(29) To pay visits to monks (Rahans) and Brahmans;
(30) To discuss and investigate the religious laws at proper times;
(31) To practise penances;
(32) To practise chastity;
(33) To know and discern the Four Noble Truths;
(34) To meditate on the happy repose of Nirvana;
(35) To keep one's mind tranquil as that of an Ahrahat whose mind, though in the midst of the eight changes and chances of life, does not shake, e.g., abundance and want, censure and praise, joy and distress, popularity and abandonment;
(36) Not to have any anxiety or fear;
(37) To be free from the dark mist of avariciousness;
(38) To be indifferent to any danger or suffering;

(N.B.—These four rare virtues, numbers 35, 36, 37 and 38, are attainable only by Ahrahats and not by any men).

By reason of the religious principles thus inculcated, violent agitation has been admittedly absent in Burma though Burma has been agitating for Home Rule very acutely and intelligently for some time past. It has been said that the difficulties in the way of Responsible Government in India rest very largely on matters of caste, language and religion; but everybody must admit that we have no caste, and that we have one language, one race and one religion. Our women in Burma occupy a very high status. They get Municipal Franchises and can vote for the election of Headmen in the rural districts. They have the control of the purse in the family. Sir John Guy Rutledge, the Chief Justice of Burma expressed an opinion in a reported case, Indian Law Reports, Rangoon Series, Vol. 5, pages 406–419, that "there is no country where the principle of equality of the sexes has been carried further than in Burma in matters of inheritance and devolution of property."

Burma is the largest Province in the Indian Empire. It has an area of over 230,000 square miles and a population of nearly 13,000,000, out of which over 10,000,000 profess Buddhism. Take the case of Burman Officers, present or past, placed in responsible appointments, Judicial or Administrative. They have not only been found fit but some of them have even excelled in some respects. Our Burma University is also supplying numbers of well educated young men and women for services in various branches of public and private life. The future, therefore, before us beams bright.

Thirdly, that Burma is part and parcel of the Indian Empire, and that whatever privileges are granted to the Indians, the same rights will be extended to Burma. Therefore, we would simply look on to India until such time as we deem fit and desirable to ask for separation. Against this reason, I may refer to the Skeen Committee's report on Indianization of the Army. Burma was entirely left out in the cold from it. The way is open for Indians only and not to the Burmans to enter the new branches of the Army and Navy. The object we seek to achieve is to fit us, Burmans, to undertake the defence of our country and frontiers. Much encouragement has been given to the Indians to form and officer a corps. I again say that Burma, not being England's pet spoilt child, has been left out in the cold. Some Indian Army students have been sent back from Sandhurst because they could not follow the lectures given in English; but poor Burma was not even asked to try. India has all along looked for herself, and in the case of the Army and Navy, Burma has not even been asked to play the part of a Cinderella. No help towards forming a National Army has been extended to Burma. The answer is not far to seek. "India and Burma for the Indians" appears to be the game. Even though nothing has been done and no favour shown in this connection, there is no substantial reason why we should wait for the crumbs to be swept off the table, considering that history bears witness to the fact we have the martial spirit, the manhood and heaps of it to form a National Army. We want a live National Army being trained by British Officers with the right for promotion when considered fit. The process of development will naturally be contingent on success achieved in the various stages of experiment. There is no difference of nationality in Burma, so there is no reason to look for disadvantages of difference in language and general knowledge. It is the duty of the Government to see that the agitation in India does not usurp the rights of the weak. Otherwise, the fundamental principle of the British Government to protect the rights of small nations would have no meaning.

The Skeen Report, it is clear, means that Burma should be, and will be under the military control of Indian Officers. Is it politic; is it in the interest of the Empire; is it just and is it fair to deny us our natural rights? Will the British Government, that has always stood out as the champion of liberty, justice and fair play, deprive us of a nation's rights and wishes? Can any Government secure a contented people when the people are discontented? I can assure you that a self-governing, contented and prosperous Burma will be an asset in the East rather than any that you have under any foreign element.

I may here point out Burma is, according to a former Lieutenant-Governor, the richest undeveloped Province in the Indian Empire. She produces large quantities of rice, beans, oil seeds and other cereals, timber, cotton, cutch, rubber, hides, tungsten, silver, lead, petroleum and many other valuable products. Now, for the sake of argument, if India gets Home Rule with Dominion Status such as that of Canada or Australia, what would be the Scheme of Reforms or Constitution for Burma? There will be the following main heads :—

(1) Provincial Legislative Council.
(2) Provincial Government.
(3) Imperial Legislative Council.
(4) Government of India.
(5) The Secretary of State in Council.
(6) Matters concerning India and the Empire.
(7) Military and other matters.

Take item No. 4, the Government of India. The Governor-General of India will be the head, and assisted by an Executive Council. Stretching the point as far as possible, how many Burmans will there be in such a Council? In my opinion, there will possibly be one or none at all. Take again item No. 3, Imperial Legislative Council. The strength of the Council may be 120 or 150. How many seats will be allotted to Burma? India proper possesses 350,000,000 souls and Burma 13,000,000; 350 divided by thirteen gives a dividend of twenty-seven, that is to say, to every twenty-seven Indian Councillors, there will be one Burman Councillor. The number of members of the Council will be based upon the population. Say if Burma can send thirteen candidates to represent its cause, the other provinces of India will jointly sent 350 candidates. Could anyone then say that Burma will ever have a majority in the Council? What will then be our position? Could any of our resolutions be carried through? Will Burma get the majority of the votes? Again, in the very near future a Privy Council will be established in India. I have grave doubts if Burma will be called upon to take an active part in it. At present Burma is the hunting ground for the non-Burmese races as the land is flowing with milk and honey, and a safe bank for the Government of India for the purposes of revenue. This is quite evident from the statements shown above. Take again the case of holding important administrative appointments. Will the Government of India allow the majority of Burmans to have a free hand in the matter of important administrative appointments in their own land? I should think not. The Indian Parliament will say that the popular song of "Burma for Burmans" should not be sung now. The true song must be Burma for the most capable, whatever be their nationality, caste or creed within British India. All things being equal, take a Burman, but for efficiency's sake don't pretend that all things are equal, merely to choose a Burman. Indians have played a great part in the development of Burma. It is a matter in which uniformity throughout the Indian Empire is most desirable." The Burmans then will be kicked out in their own soil. Who will be controlling Customs, Post, Telegraph, Salt, Opium, Railways, Army and Navy, Excise, Income-tax, Accounts, Marine Transport, Steamer, Civil Police, Military Police, etc.? Will Burmans migrate to other Provinces of India for any purpose? I say that they will not and they cannot. In the first place, if they desire to go to any other parts of the Indian Empire, they will have to learn the respective languages of the country, such as Urdu, Arabic, Tamil, Telugu, Hindi, Bengali, Hindustani, and a score of other languages, in order to enable them to take up the appointments thereat. It is an impossible task. In the second place, the Burmans and especially their families will not reconcile themselves to the new conditions that will be placed upon them, owing to divergence of customs, religion, languages, mode of living and a score of other diversities, such as caste, etc. They will simply be an outcast in those places. Again, what about the revenues derived in Burma from the sources of Customs, Post, Telegraph, Salt, Railways and other so-called subjects of Imperial concern. Will the Self-governing Institutions of India allow Burma to spend its own revenue in its own place? For the above reasons I would pluck up my courage of conviction and say that the grip on Burma by India will be very much more tightened than at present when India gets Home Rule. It is quite natural for India to do so, because it cannot risk the loss of such a rich Province like Burma.

Fourthly, some say that it cost a great deal of money to the Indian Government when Burma was annexed, and therefore Burma must still continue to be a Province of the Indian Empire. This reason is not tenable at all at the present age of civilisation. The mere fact of indebtedness, though I do not believe that now it is so, will not give any right to India to keep us in bondage all the time.

Separated Burma will give Buddhist Colleges and schools, controlled in some respects by some of our venerable and respected monks of the country. Separated Burma will give abundant food for the ambitious people of Burma, many new ways and means of earning in the land, of trading in the produce of the land, and of finding food and money for the hungry millions. Separated Burma will be able to introduce a Military Training Act for the Burmese race, an Immigration Act, a Foreigners' Marriage Validity Act, Compulsory Education Act State-aid Industrial Act, an Agricultural Act, a Commercial Act, Technical and Foreign Education Act and a score of other Acts necessary for the good of the country. Separated Burma will have fiscal control of its revenue derived in the country. In a free and separated Burma, the Burmese race will become a unit among the other races within the great British Empire capable of developing the country to suit their own natural talents and requirements, without any prejudice to the interests of the Empire. All the words and phrases contained in the various laws of the country, particularly in Codes of Procedure, such as in choosing a Jury and an Assessor for trial of Indian British subjects will have to be altered in the case of the Burman British subjects. For the present, all the general laws passed by the Government of India are applicable to Burma.

We Burmans are tacitly and unknowingly included so far as the race is concerned, within the definition of Indian. What does it lead to and what will be the consequences in the near future? Being politically part and parcel of India, Burma and its people are not properly known to the British public. Why; what is the cause of it? Because Burma is not taken as a separate unit within the British Empire. Sympathy with the British public and Parliament for Burma is therefore absent. Whenever it is said that we are Burmans the British public runs away with the idea that we hail from Bermudas, an island in the Atlantic Ocean. I myself had the experience of having to explain to Lords Dunboyne and Portsmouth that we are Burmans belonging to the Province of Burma which, through no fault of ours, has been attached to the Indian Empire. This took place when I had the honour of being presented at His Majesty, the King-Emperor's Levee, at St. James' Palace, on the 21st June, 1909. Separated Burma will become a self-governing Dominion and a member of the British Empire. Burma with its own race as at present, is like a great vessel proceeding on the surface of the ocean. She is moving past the non-Burman spectators while they watch her gaily from the shore; now a mountainous wave dashes straight against the bow and she seems to be drifting backward; at another time, the troubled water buffets her side and makes her swerve; then there is a respite and the good ship forges ahead and thus, now set back, now recovered. But she goes on determined and unyielding until she reaches her destination, i.e., Self-Governing Burma as an integral part of the mighty British Empire.

Those who have been observing her closely know perfectly well that Separation mania is within the heart of almost every Burman as she has all these years been under the heel of India, which has treated her as a milch cow. The Burmese people are only choosing time. This is now the moment to adopt the measure, this is the opportunity to make the demand as I consider that the arrival of the Commission in India and Burma is an occasion of no ordinary significance, not merely because of its undertaking with the traditions of ancient polity but because of the opportunity which it gives to all of us to meet the leading men of the English Bar and British Parliament, and to ventilate our views in manipulating the affairs of our country, because I consider that it brings with it sympathy, friendliness, conciliation and hope, and there is every reason to predict that in this Commission lies Burma's salvation, and because I have faith in the British Parliament. Take the case of removing the Fort on the Shwedagon Pagoda, Rangoon, Burma. It was the British Parliament which granted our request.

Some of my brethren in Burma have decided not to co-operate with the Commission. In this respect I beg to differ from them with their views, because in my humble opinion, that though the Commission can be boycotted now, yet their recommendations and decisions will entirely influence the British Parliament to put them on the Statute Book to become laws of the country. When they become laws, we cannot boycott the said laws then. If we fail to take this golden opportunity, we shall be lost for ever as a Burmese nation within the British Empire. Our claim should not be put off with "ifs," "buts," and such needless phrases. They are only an eyewash of which we are tired. Our motto should be "save the Burmese nation first (from being drowned in the flood of non-Burmese races) and with it, its beautiful religion," and then agitate for any form of government we want. It must be understood that by the mere fact of political separation we do not mean that non-Burman races will have to go away from this country. We only want to protect our own race and the religion we profess, and we should also have a far larger share in its management. The rapid advancement by the Self-governing Colonies is to be attributed to the absence of communalism and the Laws made from time to time for the restriction of immigration.

As properly remarked by Mr. Montagu and Lord Chelmsford, Burma is not India. Burma is not that caste-ridden India with all its communal dissensions and religious feuds. The Declaration of 1917 is beyond a question for the protection of the minorities in the neighbouring country, India, and whatever inconvenience our Legislature may have experienced in the matter of communalism it must be ascribed to India, for no cause other than the legal fiction that Burma is a Province of India. It cannot be denied that the state of affairs in Burma has been such by the continual influx of people from other countries, and claiming to be domiciled Burmans, there is hardly left any scope for the development of the country by the Burmans themselves. Burma separated from India could have her own laws for the restriction of immigration. But so long as she remains tied to the apron strings of India such a procedure would be out of the question. We have already colonies of people from neighbouring and other countries calling themselves domiciled Burmans and claiming representation in the Council.

But the influx will go on for ever, as it has been allowed with impunity for the last few decades, if not stopped in time by legislation. If Australia, South Africa, Canada, New Zealand, etc., and even the United States of America could make their own laws to govern immigration, there is no reason whatever why Burma should not enjoy that right and take all steps necessary for the development of the country.

But the preliminary step is Separation from India.

Therefore, advance Burma; be strong and have the moral courage to speak out your own mind."

This was seconded by Saya Sein and U Mg. Gyee (Tadaywa) and supported by Mr. George H. Munro, Chairman, British Burman Association, in Burmese.

"In supporting the resolution wholeheartedly on behalf of the descendants born of Britishers and brought up and domiciled in Burma, he drew attention to what happens in the forests in the Salween Hill Tracts, where, when the bamboo flowers and bamboo seeds drop, myriads of rodents swarm out of the ground and increase with, one may say, lightning speed and overrun the hills and dales devouring the crops and everything green, causing ruin and starvation to the peoples of the Hills, and strikingly pointed out that continued connection with India would mean ruin and starvation to the Burmese people because the Indians were abnormally increasing in Burma by peaceful penetration, and what with their low standard of civilization in matters of social life and ideals and outlook so opposed to those of the Burmese people, what with the very meagre and frugal style of living of the mass of those coming here to earn a livelihood they are unable to obtain in India, what with their caste system so repugnant to the Burmese people and all combined resulting in slow but sure deterioration in the manners of the Burmese and practically ruining the Burmese accustomed to a much higher style of living, and unable to work on the low wages the Indians can afford to work for and thrive and undersell the Burmese who have been gradually but surely and steadily losing their lands and houses to these Indians in the towns and their culturable garden lands and paddy fields in the districts. Are not all these deplorable results staring the Burmese people in the face?

The Indians in the Central Legislatures of India have already more than once taken action to press for a railway connection to Burma. What would happen when Indian pressure in the Central Legislatures has the effect of compelling the Indian Railway Board to connect India with Burma by rail?

Matters are very bad for Burma on account of this continued undesirable and unnatural connection with India but when a Railway line is made, would not the Indians come pouring in like a stream of water and flood the Burmese people out of their hearths and homes? Would not the Indians then like the rats in the Salween Hills cause ruin and starvation to the Burmese people? Can a few Burmese Members of the Legislative Assembly and of the Council of State prevent the carrying out of a Railway connection resolution? Would that not be the sounding of the death-knell of the Burmese Nation and would not that swamp them out in their own country?

What then must we Burmans do to prevent such a catastrophe? The only thing that can and will prevent it and save them is immediate and thoroughly complete separation of Burma from India. Nothing else can give Burma a place in the sun.

It was a sorry mistake the Second Burmese Deputation made in England in 1920 by slacking the demand for Separation after the Viceroy, Lord Chelmsford and the Secretary of State for India, Mr. Edwin Montagu had been interviewed by the Delegation for Separation and for Reforms that went to Calcutta in December, 1917, and again in 1920 when in England they unfortunately listened to the advice of an Indian, a co-opted member, Dr. P. J. Mehta, M.D., Barrister-at-law, and of a retired Indian civilian, Mr. Bernard Houghton, to ask for one thing at a time, that is, to ask for only Dyarchy "analogous" to that given to the Major Provinces of India, and then later on, to ask for Separation, the main thing that really matters.

It is eight years since then, and there is no Separation as yet. I urged in 1922, in the columns of the Rangoon Gazette to bring about this Separation so vital to the life of Burma, by 1926, and Dominion Home Rule, by 1929. Why have we not got Separation yet? Because we the Burmese people have not made a strong and insistent demand for Separation in 1919 and 1920 while our Representatives were on Deputation in England.

But why has this happened? Because some of our leaders, like Tharrawaddy Pu, M.L.C., have, apparently, short memories and, though a Home Ruler, has been charmed by Indian Sirens. He, as well as U Tok Kyi, M.L.A., now prefer Indian Home Rule, i.e., Swaraj, to Burmese Home Rule. They and their Swarjist followers like U Paw Tun, A.T.M., M.L.C., have been so lulled to not only inactivity for the liberation of Burma from the Indian yoke, but they are now opposing us instead of joining forces to insist on immediate Dominion Home Rule, because they are trusting Indian Swarajists and Indian Congresswallas like Mr. Tyabjee, M.L.C., who coax them and tell them to wait till India gets Dominion Home Rule!

Just fancy they do not want Home Rule for Burmania but are happy to see her in fetters under the feet of India and to be content to see her play the Cinderella in the Kitchen of India! Oh! what shame to treat beautiful Burmania so!

The British Prince has sent seven Ambassadors headed by Sir John Simon who will be coming to Burma by January 1929, to make Burmania try on the fairy glass slippers of her fairy God-mother that she may wed the British Prince and become a Princess, and be an equal partner in the British Commonwealth but these Home Rulers and Swarajists are trying to prevent her from meeting the Seven British Ambassadors, that she may not be made a Princess in her own right. Cinderella's Indian sisters are fooling the Burmese Home Rulers-cum Swarajist National Parliamentary Organization and they are dreamily listening into inaction.

Let us Burma for the Burmans Leaguers like loyal valiant Knights of Burma come to the rescue and help Burmania to try on the glass slippers by welcoming the Seven Ambassadors that subject Burma may become: THE BURMA FREE STATE."

The Resolution was carried with tremendous applause.

The remaining resolutions Nos. 2, 3, 4, 7, 8 and 9 were carried unanimously; No. 5, relating to the Sanghas was withdrawn to be considered later. The feeling of the meeting was that reform must come from within the Sanghas and not imposed from without, by laymen. Resolution 6: as to who is a Burman was defined by Mr. George H. Munro. The English version is as follows:

> Agenda No. 6. To define the meaning of the word "Burman," that is who and what is a Burman for the purposes of the Constitution of Burma and all its implications.

A Burman is defined to be:—

(i) A person of any race born and brought up on the soil of Burma and who continues to make Burma his or her home for good, without distinction of caste, class, colour, or creed; and

(ii) A person of any race born outside of Burma but who comes to Burma, lives in Burma for not less than 25 years, knows Burmese well and claims Burmese citizenship with the intention of making Burma his or her home for good.

All others not coming within these two categories are necessarily non-Burmans, and must be treated as aliens and foreigners coming to Burma for temporary purposes only.

The definition was unanimously adopted.

It was also agreed to that the resolutions passed at the meeting be carried out in consultation, if practicable, with the leaders of the meeting at the Saduditha zayat; that the meeting urges the holding of public meetings in all big towns and villages to pass resolutions advocating the separation of Burma from India; that the resolution relating to separation and grant of Dominion Home Rule be communicated to His Excellency the Viceroy, to the Chairman, Indian Statutory Commission and the Secretary of State for India; that U Mya U and the members of the Executive Committee are elected to arrange for the reception of the Simon Commission during their visit to Burma. Resolution No. 10 was that the Committee is empowered to prepare a Memorandum and submit same to the Commission demanding the immediate and complete separation from India and that after separation Burma to deal with the Secretary of the British Government concerned with the Self-Governing Dominions, viz., the Secretary of State for the Colonies.

The meeting dispersed after a vote of thanks to the Chair.

4. The following telegram from U Mayo, Chairman, Sule Pagoda Road, Rangoon, dated the 27th August 1928, was despatched in accordance with the Resolutions, to His Excellency, the Governor of Burma, Rangoon; His Excellency, the Viceroy, New Delhi, the Chairman, Indian Statutory Commission, care of the Officer in Charge, Indian Statutory Commission, New Delhi; the Secretary of State for India, India Office, Whitehall, London:

"All Burma mass meeting Presided over by U Maya Aggamahapandita adopted proposal moved by U Mya U Barrister to represent before Simon Commission for Immediate Separation of Burma from India and Simultaneous grant of Dominion Home Rule for Burma and that Simon Commission be accorded a fitting welcome."

The Assistant Private Secretary to the Viceroy in his Demi-Official letter No. 4868 G.P. from Viceregal lodge, Simla, dated the 29th August, 1928, acknowledged receipt as follows:—"I am desired to acknowledge the receipt of your telegram dated the 27th August, 1928."

The Secretary, Indian Statutory Commission, in his No. E. M. 71/7 (Bur.), New Delhi Camp, dated the 20/30th August, 1928 acknowledges as follows: "I am directed to acknowledge with thanks the receipt of your telegram dated the 27th August, 1928."

PART II.

THE BURMA REFORMS.

The announcement made by His Majesty's Government in the House of Commons on the 20th August, 1917, with His Majesty's approval, to grant full responsible Government to India as the best form of Government known to the British, by successive stages, was extended to Burma under section 52 of the Government of India Act, 1919, on the 7th October 1921. Burma is necessarily included in the Royal Proclamation of the 23rd December, 1919, in which His Majesty referred to grant of full responsible Government hereafter and to the right of her people to direct her affairs and safeguard her interests under the scheme of the Burma Reforms which came into force on the 3rd July, 1922. The Burma Legislative Council, as a consequence, came into actual being on the 1st January, 1923.

2. The next stage for further progressive realization of full responsible Government as an integral part of the British Commonwealth under section 84A of the Government of India Act is to take place at the expiration of ten years after the passing of the Act, i.e., in 1929, but for various reasons, that period was shortened by Parliament, early in 1927.

For the purposes of this section the Royal Statutory Commission of seven Parliamentarians selected from the three parties under the Chairmanship of Sir John Simon, a Liberal, has been appointed by His Majesty and their preliminary enquiry began in India in February, 1928, and is to be completed in about June, 1928. The Commission comes to Burma on the 29th January, 1929, to enquire and report whether it would be possible to establish complete responsible Government or not in Burma, what the growth of education is, what the development of representative institutions, and connected matters.

3. In view of the inquiry, it is well to premise that the announcement of the 20th August, 1917, marked a new era in the history of Burma. The political awakening of the announcement was more marked in Burma than in any part of the Empire. Prior to August, 1917, political consciousness was practically non-existent and those who took any interest at all did not exceed a few score. On Mr. Montagu's visit a deputation was organised at once. Burma sent U Phay a retired official, U May Oung, Barrister-at-Law, U Ba Pe, B.A., and U Su, Barrister-at-Law of the Young Men's Buddhist Associations as a Delegation to Calcutta early in December 1917, to make representations to His Excellency Baron Chelmsford, P.C., G.M.S.I., G.M.I.E., Viceroy of India, and the Right Honourable Mr. Edwin S. Montagu, P.C., His Majesty's Secretary of State for India, that the existence of Burma as a distinct Nation within the British Empire may not be jeopardized and with that object placed Separation of Burma from India in the forefront of Burma's political programme for a place in the Sun, to put an end to their wholly artificial union, for the vital reason that such a step far outweighs any consideration as to advantage or expediency arising from that union, the Burmese Nation being as dissimilar from the Indian peoples as any two nations, dwelling near each other, can possibly be.

It was impressed upon them that the diversity is not merely one of religion, but also of race, language, traditions, art, ideals, law, and the whole fabric of the social system. Caste distinctions are unknown. Sex disabilities have never existed. Burmese women are fully emancipated and have always taken a prominent share in public, religious and social affairs; that they enjoy the municipal franchise, and are to be met with in trade, industries and agriculture; and that moreover, the country is as nearly homogeneous as can be expected.

It was urged that under indigenous rule there were only two estates of the realm—the Royal Family and the rest of the nation, the pauper of one day might displace a chief or a minister on the next; that a peasant proprietary firmly established on the land is the most distinguishing feature of our body politic, that to tack on such a country to the conglomeration of jarring interests of India would not add to the reputation for unrivalled statesmanship enjoyed by the British; that our aspiration is to be constituted a new Eastern Dependency with a Governor and a legislature under the ultimate control of the British Cabinet; that in fine, we wish to be self-contained and to exist as a free unit, a separate entity, an equal partner in the great British Commonwealth and naturally dislike the idea of Burma's distinct individuality being merged in, and overshadowed by, India; that Burma presents the most promising conditions for the foundation of a future democratic government under the guidance of statesmen in the British Isles; and that the Burmese do not forget that the Indian National Congress at its first session in the 1885 passed the following resolution: "That this Congress deprecates the annexation of Upper Burma, and considers that if the Government unfortunately decide on annexation, the entire country of Burma should be separated from the Indian Viceroyalty and constituted a Crown Colony; as distinct in all matters from the Government of the country as is Ceylon."

4. When the report on the Indian Constitutional Reforms was published on the 22nd April, 1919, Burma was excluded from consideration for Reforms. The reasons stated were that: "Burma is not India. Its people belong to another race in another stage of political development, and its problems are altogether different. We therefore set aside the problem of Burma's political evolution for separate and further consideration."

On the publication of this report, the Lieutenant-Governor of Burma, Sir Reginald Craddock, took steps for a tentative scheme of Reforms for Burma which was published on the 17th December, 1918, and a considered scheme, with modifications, suggested in a letter from the Local Government of the 28th August, 1919. The schemes were strongly condemned by the Burmese political associations as totally insufficient to satisfy the legitimate aspirations of the Burmese people.

As a result, a deputation was despatched to England on the 7th July, 1919, and reached London on the 8th August, 1919. It represented the Burma Reforms League, the Young Men's Buddhist Association, the Upper Burma Peoples' Association, the Moulmein Burma Association and others and was strongly supported by the great and thoroughly representative public meetings held at Rangoon on the 29th February and the 2nd May, 1919, to plead Burma's case before the Secretary of State for India for a more liberal treatment on the lines proposed by the delegation to Calcutta and subsequently reinforced and added to by Resolutions passed at the All-Burma Mass Meeting held at the Jubilee Hall on the 17th August, 1919.

5. The members of the deputation were Mg Pu, B.A., Barrister-at-law, Mg Ba Pe, B.A., and Mg Tun Shein, B.A. They pressed for the inclusion of Burma in the Government of India Bill and countered the various objections made against the grant to Burma of the Reforms for the Major Provinces of India, pointed out that the same general laws apply to Burma as in India, the revenue system is the same as obtained in Madras and Bombay Presidencies, the Executive and Judicial systems are identical with those in the Punjab, in Excise and Opium matters Burma has the same problems as in India, that in fact in all the essentials of Government, the Indian Government always dealt with Burma on precisely the same lines as the other great Provinces of India. They urged that in culture and enlightenment the Burmese are fully equal to the Indians, our women occupy a higher and freer position than elsewere in Asia, that our women ought to enjoy equal political rights with men. They reiterated that practically there is no diversity of race and language, that Burma is practically homogeneous, that minor races such as Karens, or immigrants such as Indians and Chinese offer no special problems, the past feuds between Hindus and Muhammadans in India are well known, but do not recur in Burma where a kindly tolerance reigns supreme, there are no divisions of caste, structure of society is essentially democratic, more democratic in fact than in the British Isles, there is less class distinctions and more fraternity than in England. The Burmese have always been patriotic and cherish an intense love for their country, take a pride in themselves and their race, and nowhere does patriotism burn with a truer flame than in Burma, and thanks largely to the monastery schools, primary education is more widely diffused than in India, but through failure to create a University at Rangoon, the number of graduates is comparatively small, but there is at least as large a proportion as in India of capable, level-headed men, fit to grasp the problems and carry out the functions of representative Government. That and not the number of B.A.'s is the essential point. There is no unrest and anarchy as in India. We have a higher claim, therefore, to self-government and this should have special weight.

They stated that the Burmese were, therefore, grievously disappointed at the treatment meted out, notwithstanding the view expressed by Sir Reginald Craddock as regards conditions in Burma that:—

"It can be confidently affirmed that Burma is endowed with many advantages notably in respect to those conditions which favour development on democratic lines. Thus she is free from those religious dissensions which militate against the co-operation of men of different creeds. Toleration of the scruples of others is a ruling tenet of her religion. There is an entire absence of caste, and no marked cleavage of social distinction or occupation exists. The man of humble birth in Burma has always been able to rise as high as his ability or his education might carry him . . . Burma undoubtedly offers a more promising field for Self-Government than does India at the present juncture."

The Deputation, therefore, urged that for these reasons, indeed, and on account of the relative simplicity of the problems that will confront Burma's new Legislature, Burma might claim and rightly claim a more generous measure of Self-Government than that accorded to India and asked that their representation be placed before the Parliamentary Joint Committee for their consideration.

6. On the 19th August, 1919, evidence was tendered by the Burma Deputation before the Parliamentary Joint Committee, the Chairman being Lord Selborne.

Four questions were put and answered, viz.,

5285. Chairman : You and your colleagues are a Deputation from the Burma Reform League ?—Mg Pu : Yes and not only the Burma Reform League, but I represent a very large section of the Burmese population. The Burma Reforms League is only a portion of it, and I put down my name as President, because I happen to be the President of the Burma Reform League at the present moment.

5286. Chairman : You have come, I think, all the way from Burma, and on purpose to lay your views before this Committee ?—Mg. Pu : Yes.

5287. Chairman : My colleagues and myself would be very happy to hear any statement you wish to make. You have, I think, put in a Memorandum.—Mg. Pu : Yes, I have put in two : one "A Plea for Burma" and the other a definite proposal, "A Scheme of Reform for Burma."

5288. Chairman : Perhaps you will make any statement you wish to make in supplement to this memorandum ?—Mg. Pu : May it please your Lordship. On behalf of the people of Burma, I am much obliged to your Lordship's Committee for giving me an opportunity to place the views of Burma before this Committee. At one time it was thought that Burma would not be allowed to give evidence but happily we are now allowed to give before the Committee the views of Burma. Burma, your Lordship knows, is a fairly large country—I think the largest province in India ; it is larger than France and larger than the British Isles, with an area of 270,000 square miles, out of which 172,000 square miles are directly under the British Government. The rest of the country consists of independent Native States or of semi-independent Native States. Burma has a population of 12,000,000, out of which 10,500,000 are composed of Buddhists, and the rest are composed of Christians, Hindus and Muhammadans. Of course these latter form a very small minority in the country. As your Lordship knows, most of the Burmese people profess a religion which has given satisfaction to the spiritual yearnings of a very large number of people in this world. That religion is professed by over 500,000,000 of people in the world. Burma had a very great past in her history. We had a proper Kingdom when the British came under the Norman Conquest, so that we have a fairly ancient history behind us.

As regards my credentials, we represent a very large section of the Burmese population. I think I have fairly submitted the general lines of our case, and I trust that your Lordship's Committee will report favourably on behalf of Burma in connection with the reforms which will suit Burma.

Chairman : We are much obliged to you. You have put your case extremely clearly and from the Memorandum which you have put in I think we understand exactly what those you represent wish us to understand.

7. It was noticed that Mg Pu was not cross-examined like the other Indian witnesses who appeared before the Joint Select Committee who went to England on behalf of the Reforms for India.

The Burma Deputation members felt this was suspicious and unsatisfactory and were very anxious lest Burma's case would be set aside. Interviews with members of the Indian Deputations increased their fears and therefore decided to influence the Committee through the Press and members of Parliament. A series of interviews with various persons and members of Parliament and persons connected with newspaper offices were approached. Another pamphlet—being a fuller account of Burma's constitutional needs : "Burma : the Cinderella of the Indian Empire" was printed and circulated. A vigorous campaign was inaugurated to inform the British Public about Burma affairs. The Secretary of State for India was requested for an interview but he refused to grant an interview. Then they managed to see Lord Sinha, Mr. B. N. Basu and others. From these interviews it was learnt that Burma's case would not be considered by the Committee, the reason assigned being that the Committee had received neither the Government of Burma's proposals nor the Government of India's Despatch on the same. A memorial was then submitted to Mr. Montagu.

8. The Joint Committee's report was published on the 17th November, 1919, and it was recommended not to include Burma in the Government of India Bill. In paragraph 8 of their Report the Committee wrote : "They do not doubt but that the Burmese have deserved and should receive a constitution 'analogous' to that provided in this Bill for their Indian fellow subjects."

On this, further active and energetic steps were again taken through the Press and Members of Parliament and other influential personages when an interview was granted on the 20th November, 1919, and Mr Montagu promised to make a definite declaration of Burma's position.

Further strenuous steps were then taken and efforts made and a proposal submitted to the Secretary of State for India for the appointment of a representative Committee which will have the confidence of the people of Burma to enquire on the spot in Burma into matters such as franchise, functions, relations between Burma and India, etc., and to report thereon in time to enable the Secretary of State to introduce Reforms into Burma before Christmas, 1920. Suggestions were also made that the Committee should consist of one member to represent the Government of India, one member the Government of Burma, two or three non-official Burmans having the confidence of the people to represent the popular views and that it should be presided over by men like Lord Sinha or Mr. Charles Roberts.

Mr. Montagu replied that "the suggestions therein laid before him are receiving his closest consideration."

9. On the 3rd December, 1919, during the third reading of the Government of India Bill in the House of Commons in Committee, Mr. Ben Spoor of the Labour Party moved an amendment to include Burma in the Bill and requested the Secretary of state to make a definite promise to Burma. It was too late for inclusion in the Government of India Bill. After some discussion in the House Mr. Montagu made his announcement, the salient points of which are :—

> "What Burma is anxious for is to come to Parliament itself, and not to be left to the tender mercies of either the Secretary of State, the Government of India, or the Local Government . . . Burma is not India, but Burma must get an analogous grant of government, subject to differences in the local conditions of Burma. . . . The real case therefore, is that Burma will get without loss of time one of two things. It will either become a Governor's province—if that turns out to be the best solution—and in that case it will be dealt with under clause 15: if however, it wishes to have a different constitution, say, from the rest of India, then we shall have to have new legislation, which will be introduced without loss of time into Parliament. . . . I shall be very much surprised if at the end of next session we have not passed the Bill dealing with Burma."

After the passing of the Government of India Bill, the Secretary of State was again interviewed on the 15th December, 1919, to find out the procedure he would adopt with Burma's case. The deputation was assured that the case would not be placed before Parliament till after May, 1920, and that the Secretary of State would inform Mr. Bernard Houghton a co-opted member, some time before any measure is introduced, to enable the next Burmese deputation to place the views of the people before Parliament.

The deputation was impressed with the fact that any measures to be introduced into Parliament will be amenable to the wishes of the people of Burma. It is therefore the business of the Burmese people to find out what they wish to ask, and to ask with one voice. The deputation believed that what the Burmese people unitedly, sincerely, and earnestly demand, the British Parliament will not refuse to grant.

The Burma deputation further discovered that if the Secretary of State for India only relied on the Government of India for information from Burma, he will only hear the point of view of the Government and not the point of view of the Burmese people.

The advice of the deputation is that it is very important that there should be an uninterrupted flow of reliable and complete information between the Burmese people and our friends in England so that they may be able to work in the interests of Burma and convince the authorities with an abundant supply of facts and figures; and that we must ourselves be in touch with the democratic forces in England, to bring our claims forcibly and successfully before the British Parliament and democracy. We need persistent, constitutional and intelligent agitation. And finally, that another deputation to England must be sent to successfully push the Burma Bill during the present session of Parliament, because it is the most critical period in the history of Burma and Burma must prove herself equal to the occasion.

10. In due course the members of the second deputation to England, viz., Maung Pu, B.A., Barrister-at-law, Mg Ba Pe, B.A., Maung Thein Maung, M.A., LL.B., Barrister-at-law left Rangoon on the 29th May, 1920, with the mandate of the Burmese people given by the General Council of the Young Men's Buddhist Associations, kindred associations and the All Burma Mass Meetings of the 29th February, 1920, and the 2nd May, 1920, to ask (a) for dyarchy by Bill, (b) Separation from India, and (3) the Declaration of Rights for Burma.

On the arrival in London on the 15th June, 1920, it was found that the White Paper on Burma Reforms had been published and submitted to Parliament a few days before arrival. It contained the Government of Burma letter of the 22nd January, 1920, setting out its second scheme; and that as important questions regarding Ireland, Russia, the Punjab Riots, the Coal Crisis, and the Unemployment Question were demanding the attention of Parliament, it was unlikely there would be time for consideration of the Burma Reforms by Parliament.

After careful and prolonged discussion and consultation with the two co-opted members, Mr. Bernard Houghton, I.C.S. (Retired) and Dr. P. J. Mehta, M.B., Barrister-at-Law, and the many friends and well-wishers, the conclusion was come to in view of the political exigencies studied on the spot that:—

(1) Burma's Constitutional Reforms would be further delayed were the complicated question of Separation from India tacked on to them;

(2) Practically all the Reforms that Burma wanted could be got by notification under Section 15, clause (i) of the Government of India Act, 1919; and

(3) It would be better to ask for such notification instead of a Bill with no chance for getting the latter through Parliament before the end of the year, considering it advisable to ask for one thing at a time.

A Memorandum was at once prepared and distributed to the members of the Indian Reforms Committee, who held a meeting on the 5th July, 1920; articles were published in the Asiatic Review and in the Venturer, a Memorial was submitted to the Secretary of State for India on the 20th July, 1920, and members of Parliament, Colonel Wedgwood and others interviewed.

11. The memorial referred to, after drawing attention to the announcement of the 20th August, 1917, pointed out that in several respects Burma has a distinctive advantage over India, a sufficient advantage to justify a larger measure of self-government than that granted to the Indian Provinces because Burma is distinguished from India by uniformity in race, language and religion, by social equality, by greater literacy and by an absence of sedition.

It pointed out that the Lieutenant-Governor of Burma, Sir Reginald Craddock, said:—"There has been no extremist party of Young Burmans, there has been no unbridled and defamatory Press, there have been, thank God! no signs of unrest among Burmese students, and not even the slightest suspicion of anarchy." In this Tentative Scheme for Reforms for Burma, he agreed that Burma was for above reasons well-suited for democratic institutions, even adding that "Burma undoubtedly offers a more promising field for self-government." A former Lieutenant-Governor, Sir Herbert Thirkell White, has also stated that the Burmese are more fitted for self-government than are the Indians.

But now, it is regrettable Sir Reginald Craddock contradicting himself has recommended a Constitution for Burma in his, what may be termed the "Despatch Scheme," a form of Reforms far below that granted to the Indian Provinces. This Constitution in its essential features has been supported by the Government of India, misled by the statements in the Lieutenant-Governor's letter of the 22nd January, 1920.

The Deputation pointed out that many of the statements therein are untrue and that they were prepared to show that they are untrue. They clearly proved in their memorial that Burma is not behind India in political development; they are democratic in their social development, and are dowered with plenty of commonsense; they are capable to debate reasonably, and decide with fairness; they understand that ministers representing a majority should carry out certain policies approved by it, and can supply plenty of men capable of fulfilling this Constitutional function.

And further, the Government of India, instead of bearing in mind the pledge given by Parliament on the 20th August, 1917, seem to have lost sight of the Reforms which is to teach the people how to govern themselves, supports the Board Constitution of the Local Government which would in no way train the Burmese people for complete representative government, whether as voters, as members of the Legislature, or as ministers, because where there is no responsibility of the elector, where does his political education come in, what interest can he take in the proceedings of the Legislature, when the effect of the "Despatch Scheme" creates an indirect electorate where the majority of the voters are officials? Can this be representative government; is it even a pretence at representative government? Training in Local Government if not training in Self-Government; the former, in short, is administration, whereas the latter is legislation and decision of the great questions of policy. The Constitution proposed by the Government of India is strongly condemned in paragraph 81 of the Joint Report and again in the debate in the House of Commons, on December 4th, 1919. It moreover keeps alive class and race feeling instead of welding all the dwellers in Burma into one nation. It should not be our object to make anyone think of himself as a member of a separate class, aloof from the general like of the nation.

The Budget is also, in this "Despatch Scheme," kept outside Legislative control, reducing the Legislature to a debating society; for without control of the Budget there is, surely, no responsibility, and without responsibility there is no self-government. "Responsibility," says the Joint Report, "is the saviour of popular government and that saviour the (then) present Councils wholly lack. We are agreed that our first object must be to invest them with it." The present proposal of the Viceroy is in direct conflict with his previous opinion. Their proposal for Executive Councillors, it was pointed out, is similar to that condemned in paragraph 217 of the Joint Report, for it is not Dyarchy. In support of this singular arrangement, it is alleged that there are no Burmans fit to be Ministers. This, surely, is not true. It was pointed out by the deputation that there is an ample number of Burmans—many more indeed than in Assam or the Central Provinces—fit and capable to administer the same range of subjects as in India handed over to popular control.

That Sir Reginald Craddock, on whose opinion that of the Government of India is based, made precisely the same allegation against Indians. Why should the Government of India, which rejected his opinion on Indians amongst whom he has spent nearly his entire career, accept his view on the Burmese, whom he can know but slightly, and that at second-hand? This "Despatch Scheme" misconceives wholly what is the soul of representative government.

The deputation further pointed out, it is sophistry to assert, as the Despatch does, that the proposed Burma Constitution is in any way "analogous" to the Indian Provincial Constitution. The Secretary of State for India was reminded that the pledge he gave in Parliament for Burma was "an analogous grant of self-government, a similar grant of self-government, subject to differences in the local conditions." The deputation stressed that the Constitution proposed is not analogous; it is not similar; it is not self-government; and that, in short, the Government of India suggests the committal of a breach of faith, controverting the "Despatch Scheme" of the Local Government of Burma of the 22nd January, 1920.

The deputation pointed out that in place of the Local Government scheme supported by the Government of India, what the Burmese people, through their Associations, the Burma Reform League, the Young Men's Buddhist Associations and others, and through the great and thoroughly representative public meetings, held in Rangoon, on February 20th and May 2nd, 1920, is the following constitution, for which, in this matter they are unanimous, viz.:—

(1) Direct elections. No residential qualifications for candidates;

(2) A wide franchise without sex qualifications;
   (a) Disqualifications. Those who are under 21 (twenty-one) years of age;
   Those who are adjudged by a competent court to be of unsound mind; those who are not natives of India or of the Native States.
   (b) Qualifications. (General). Those who pay a land tax of Rs. 12 (Rupees twelve) a year; or those who pay rent of Rs. 60 (Rupees sixty), or sixty baskets of paddy a year; or those who are assessed to income-tax; or clerks or professionals whose income is not less than Rs. 300 (Rupees three hundred) a year.

(3) The Municipalities of Rangoon, Mandalay, Bassein, Moulmein, and Akyab to form separate constituencies. Other towns to be merged in the districts in which they are situated.

(4) No communal representation.

(5) Eighty per cent. of the Legislature to be elected.

(6) The principle of Dyarchy as in India.

(7) The Legislature to control the Budget as in India.

(8) In reserved subjects the vote of the Legislature, if there be a two-thirds majority, to prevail.

(9) At least two Burmese Ministers enjoying the confidence of the Legislature.

(10) At least two Executive Councillors, one only a non-Burman.

(11) The Governor to be a man of Parliamentary experience sent out from England.

(12) The President and Vice-President of the Legislature to be elected from among its members.

(13) A declaration of Rights similar to the United States Law 416, for the Philippines to be included in the Act.

(14) Separation from India, except that the Army, Navy, and Foreign policy remain under the Viceroy.

12. In concluding the memorial, the deputation pointed out that the question now is:—should Burma receive her new Constitution by a simple notification, under Section 15 (1) of the Government of India Act, or by a separate Bill. They pointed out, notification is the simpler and quicker course; that Declaration of Rights might possibly be granted under the powers to modify given by Section 15 (1) and that Separation from India is what Burma people certainly desire. That in fact it was the desire for it that led the Burmese people to ask for a separate Bill of Reforms for Burma, but, however, as they felt that demand for separation from India in the circumstances they found obtaining in England at the time would complicate matters and delay the Reforms so long overdue; and that as most of the Reforms wanted by Burma can be had by notification, they urged that a Royal Commission be sent to Burma to determine any modifications due to differences in local conditions and that this procedure would be in accordance with the pledge given in Parliament by the Secretary of State for India, and leaving the question of Separation to be taken up later after obtaining the Reforms much overdue.

13. The Report of the Second Deputation to England shows that after submission of this memorial the earliest result was known on the 23rd July, 1920, when, on that day, Draft Rules under the Government of India Act, 1919, came up before the House of Commons, where Colonel Wedgwood moved amendments to the Electoral Rules for Burma on behalf of the Deputation. They gave evidence before the Special Committee appointed by the Secretary of State for India on the 26th July following, and again on the 9th August, 1920, when the Deputation pressed for notification under Section 15 (1) of the Government of India Act, 1919, with modifications in favour of Burma as regards communal representation and women suffrage. The Special Committee promised to submit their report to the Secretary of State, who was interviewed in his office on the 12th August, 1920, when the deputation learnt that the Secretary of State took objection to the proposals of the Government of India, mainly for two reasons, viz.: want of responsibility in the parliamentary sense of the term, and the provision for indirect election, and that he would communicate with the Government of India and intimate the result in a fortnight. But when not hearing from him, the deputation addressed him on the 27th August, 7th September, 10th September, and 15th September, 1920, and forwarding the Monster Memorial, signed by thousands of the citizens of Burma, and that had then arrived, and instalments of signatures thereto, and reminding the Secretary of State of the danger in delay.

The Monster Memorial reiterated all that had been urged and pressed for previously. What is particularly noticeable therein is the request that " Burma might be separated from India in order that her path of progress towards the said goal (status of a self-governing unit in the British Empire) might not be obstructed by Indian difficulties and requirements . . . realising the fact that Burma wishes to preserve intact her special characteristics and genius and to contribute her national individuality to the common stock of nationhood embraced within the British Empire; and that " no scheme of Reforms will be acceptable to the people of Burma that does not, at least, set the course in the direction of separation from India."

It strongly condemns the " Despatch Scheme," which is based on the wrong interpretation of the word, " analogous " in the Joint Select Committee's recommendations and that the Government of India has gone wrong in interpreting it, as they ignored its connection with the announcement of August 20th, 1917, and that no scheme which does not comply with the test of responsibility can be regarded as " analogous " to what has been granted to the Indian Provinces. The London Times was approached through certain friends, and its attention drawn to the urgency of Burma Reforms, when a leader on " Aspirations of Burma " appeared on the 22nd September, 1920, in the Times.

14. On the 7th October following, it was learnt that the Secretary of State was ill and that he could make no definite announcement yet, because the Government of India was holding out on main principles! He was again addressed on the 15th October, 1920, urging the necessity of having the Reforms settled before the Prome Conference Resolution on Non-participation was held, with the result that the Special Committee met again on the 22nd October following and the Secretary of State issued the Statement which Reuter's Agency cabled out to Burma on the following day. The Special Committee met again on the 29th October, 1920, and decided upon Dyarchy for Burma, only two members dissenting. This decision was accepted by the Secretary of State for India and the London Times announced on the 20th November, 1920, that the principle of Dyarchy was to be applied to Burma, though the former on the 22nd November, said the announcement was premature. The Times rejoined that its announcement was believed to be substantially correct and declared that no decision other than the one in favour of Dyarchy would be fair to the Burmese people. This all showed how strenuously the Governments of Burma and India opposed the grant of some responsibility being included in the Reforms:

Commander Kenworthy and others of the Labour Party asked questions, when statements were made in reply on the 1st December, 1920, regretting an announcement could not be made then, although he recognized the urgency of the matter.

The last instalment of signatures to the Monster Memorial that arrived was forwarded on the 4th December for settlement of the Reforms before Christmas.

On the 8th December the Secretary of State said that he hoped to make a statement before Christmas. The deputation asked these Labour Party members to raise the question of Burma again on the following day, when a long statement was made in reply, to the effect that a short Bill would be introduced in the next session, the object of which would be to bring Burma into the scheme of Constitutional reform and that when it receives a second reading it will be referred to the Standing Committee together with the schemes of the Government of India and the Local Government of Burma when it should be for Parliament and not for the Secretary of State to decide and that he however hoped to convince the Committee that the principles of the scheme, as a Transitional method, for the other provinces of India is the best that could be found for Burma.

After this announcement Sir J. D. Rees, asked the Secretary of State for India, on behalf of the deputation whether evidence would be taken before the Committee which would consider the Burma Bill and whether the deputation whould remain or was free to return to Burma. The reply was to the effect that it would be for Parliament to decide and for the Committee when appointed to also decide whether to take evidence, and if so, from what bodies and persons, and that he could not therefore undertake the responsibility of advising whether the deputation should remain or return to Burma, so far as the Committee is concerned; that if they considered it advisable to prepare and place in his hands a written statement of their case, he will take an opportunity, if one presents itself, of communicating it to the Committee when appointed.

This reply, and the result of their enquiry among friends both in and out of Parliament led the deputation to return to Burma, leaving it to Mr. Houghton to look after their case.

15. The result of the mission to England to press Burma's claim for grant of self-government analogous to that granted to the major provinces of India achieved by the Burma Deputation may be summarized as follow:—

(1) The London Times supported the case of Burma for Dyarchy.
(2) The Indian Reform Committee, the special Committee and the Secretary of State for India in Council have rejected the Proposals of the Governments of India and Burma and accepted the principle of Dyarchy for Burma.
(3) The Secretary of State has announced in Parliament that he would introduce a short Bill to extend the principle of Dyarchy to Burma. He hopes " to be able to convince the Standing Committee that the principles of the scheme, as a transitional method for the other provinces of India, is the best that could be found for Burma."
(4) It is practically agreed that there should be no sex disqualification.

Besides working for constitutional reforms the deputation has questions asked in Parliament about rice control (which has since been practically abolished), Military occupation of Shwedagon Pagoda Hill, Board of Publicity, and the Electoral Rules, and protested against the Government of Burma's proposals to start an official newspaper.

In concluding, they record their gratitude to the members of the Burma Society and the Buddhist Society of Great Britain and Ireland for the kindness shown them; and they also record regretfully their sense of sorrow for the death of two earnest workers in the cause of Burma—U Tun Shein and Mr. T. W. Rollaston.

16. This brief account of the early struggles of the Burmese people is recorded here to show how dogged and persistent efforts to secure a system of Dyarchy that is superior to that granted to India for Burma which has practically manhood suffrage has been successful, that similar efforts must be put forth for obtaining Dominion Home Rule for Burma in advance of India and that the Simon Commission may be fully convinced and satisfied that Burma wants immediate and Complete Separation from India, and that Burma has every reason to decline to be governed by India and Indians, that the Burmese people decline to be identified with Indians and emphatically decline to be a province of India. We want to control our own destiny and govern ourselves.

We cannot and do not forget that Burma was once an Empire, having conquered the whole country including Siam, Assam, Manipur, Cachar, Naga Hills and Chittagong and defeated two inroads from China and that but for invading Bengal which was under British control in 1824, Burma might have continued as Independent Burma, and that moreover, we Burmans are a warlike and democratic people.

We request a small readjustment of our north-western boundary for including the Naga Hills,

Manipur, Cachar and adjoining tracts to round off the boundary there and we claim that the islands off Cape Negrais including also the Andamans and the Nicobars that are submerged extensions of Burma in the Sea of Burma (Bay of Bengal) and near to the Mergui Archipelago as coming within Burma's sphere of influence and should be incorporated and controlled by Burma.

Our request to the Commission for transmission to Parliament is—Dominion Home Rule for Burma. Our motto is: "Burma for Burmans" within the British Commonwealth of Free Nations forming the British Empire that she may be a glowing Ruby in the British Crown.

PART III.

PROPOSED DRAFT CONSTITUTION OF THE BURMA FREE STATE.

PREAMBLE.

Whereas it is the declared policy of the British Parliament to grant full responsible Self-Government to British India, and necessarily to Burma, by the historical announcement in the House of Commons on August 20th, 1917, and by Royal Proclamation of the Crown on December 23rd, 1919, as the object of British policy with regard to India, and necessarily to Burma as well, as an integral part of the British Commonwealth of Free Nations forming the British Empire:

And whereas Parliament has appointed the Royal Statutory Commission composed of seven Parliamentarians selected from the three British parties under the Chairmanship of Sir John Simon, a Liberal, for the purposes of the inquiry imposed by Section 84A of the Government of India Act, 1919, to report as to whether and to what extent it is desirable to establish the principle of full responsible Self-Government indicated above or to modifiy or restrict its degree as then existing in Burma, including the question of whether a second chamber of the local legislature is or is not desirable, and to also inquire and report on any other matter affecting Burma:

And whereas the action of Parliament in such matters must be guided by the co-operation received from the people of Burma and by the extent which it is found that confidence can be reposed in the sense of responsibility of the Burmese people:

And whereas it is expedient to give to Burma the largest measure of independence of the Government of India, which is compatible with the circumstances of Burma:

And whereas it is imperative that all classes, and all races making up the Burmese peoples shall have full cultural, educational, and religious autonomy and it is essential that they shall be solemnly assured that all that is implied therein shall be guaranteed to them as well as an equitable share of political and economic opportunities which will allow them an adequate place "in the Sun of Burma," all such classes and races whether in a majority or in a minority being equally the children of the soil as any single one of them:

And whereas it is reasonable that each and every member of these classes and races require a clear statement of their inherent natural or fundamental rights that shall be such as could be independent of the legislature and enforceable by the proposed Supreme Court of Burma, under whose protection these indefeasible rights shall be placed:

And whereas it is desirable that certain other things which fall under the objects and purposes of a State rather than under fundamental rights, and coming under the aims and objects of a State, the realization of which would be dependent on the working of the legislative power and on political and economic expediencies shall also be equally assured to them, that there be justice for all, that the rights of all classes and all races may be protected without jeopardising the rights of the whole people as a Burmese Nation, that the different loyalties of the citizen, the worker, the family-man, the devotee, may frankly realise their right to live, each, in their proper sphere, that all their loyalties may be integrated into the frame-work of the National life of Burma:

And whereas it is necessary to provide for the above essentials in a well-ordered and progressive and a free state, that the peace, happiness and prosperity of the Burmese peoples may be fully realized:

And whereas the above aims, aspirations and objects of the Burmese peoples are impossible and impracticable of realization by the continuance of the wholly artificial and unnatural union of Burma to India:

And whereas the Burmese people have been insisting for the separate existence of Burma as a distinct Nation within the British Commonwealth of Nations forming the mighty British Empire, much prior to August, 1917:

And whereas on the announcement by His Britannic Majesty's Government in the House of Commons made by the Secretary of State for India on 20th August, 1917, of the future British policy regarding the Governance of India and Burma, the Burmese people immediately despatched a delegation to Calcutta to interview His Excellency Baron Chelmsford, P.C., G.M.S.I., G.M.I.E., Viceroy of India, and the Right Honourable Mr. Edwin Montagu, P.C., His Majesty's Secretary of State for India then at Calcutta, to demand a reformed system of government for Burma and placing Separation of Burma from India in the forefront of Burma's political programme for a place in the Sun.

And whereas two other deputations were despatched by the Burmese people to England to secure for Burma Separation from India, and the Reforms that would suit Burma, once in 1919, and again in 1920, with a mandate from the people to ask for: (a) Dyarchy by Bill, "analogous" to that granted to the major provinces of India; (b) Separation from India; and (c) the Declaration of Rights for Burma:

And whereas on the return of the Second Deputation to England in June, 1920, the political situation and circumstances obtaining in England at the time, due to questions as those of Ireland, Russia, the Punjab Riots, the Coal Crisis, and Unemployment were such and were demanding the urgent attention and consideration of Parliament, they found that Parliament was not likely to have time to spare during that session, for consideration of Burma Reforms and for Separation of Burma from India by Bill, the Deputation reluctantly decided, that though the Separation from India is what the Burmese people want and that it was the desire for it that led the Burmese people to ask for a "Separate Bill of Reforms for Burma," but as it was likely that the Reforms that were much overdue would be considerably delayed, they must necessarily ask for one thing at a time, and so pressed for the grant of Dyarchy, deferring to a more favourable opportunity the question of demand for Separation:

And whereas the appointment of the Statutory Commission gives the required favourable opportunity to demand Separation of Burma from India; and in view of the further demand of Dominion Home Rule, by the mass of the Burmese peoples the Constitution for same to be on the lines detailed in the foregoing paragraphs to satisfy the Burmese people:

And whereas it is desirable, nay, necessary, that a small realignment of the boundary of Burma on the North Western frontier be made by including the Naga Hills, Manipur, Cachar and adjoining tracts to round off the boundary on the said frontier; that moreover the islands off Cape Negrais including also the Andamans, and the Nicobars that are submerged extensions of Burma in the Sea of Burma (Bay of Bengal), on the South-West be likewise included in Burma as coming within Burma's sphere of influence and to be controlled by Burma; and that Karenni adjoining Siam form a part of Burma on the East:

Be it therefore enacted by the King's Most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual, and Temporal, and Commons, in this Parliament assembled, and by authority of the same :

That the Constitution hereunto annexed shall be the Constitution of Burma and that Burma shall be styled and known as THE BURMA FREE STATE.

CONSTITUTION OF THE BURMA FREE STATE

(MYANMA SHWEPYIGYI).

Clause 1. The Burma Free State (otherwise hereafter called or sometimes called Myanma Shwepyigyi is a co-equal member of the Community of Nations forming the British Commonwealth of Free Nations.

Clause 2. All powers of Government and all authority legislative, executive and judicial in Burma, are derived from the people of Burma and the same shall be exercised in the Burma Free State (Myanma Shwe Pyigyi) through the organizations established by or under, and in accord with the Constitution.

Clause 3. Every person without distinction of sex, domiciled in the area of the jurisdiction of the Burma Free State (Myanma Shwe Pyigyi) at the time of the coming into operation of this Constitution, who was born in Burma or either of whose parents was born in Burma or who has been ordinarily resident in the area of jurisdiction of the Burma Free State (Myanma Shwe Pyigyi) for not less than twenty-five years, and claims Burmese Citizenship, is a citizen of the Burma Free State (Myanma Shwe Pyigyi) and shall within the limits of the jurisdiction of the Burma Free State (Myanma Shwe Pyigyi) enjoy the privileges and be subject to the obligations of such citizenship : Provided that any such person being a citizen of another State may elect not to accept the citizenship hereby conferred ; and the conditions governing the future acquisition and termination of citizenship in the Burma Free State (Myanma Shwe Pyigyi) shall be determined by law.

Clause 4. The national language of the Burma Free State (Myanma Shwe Pyigyi) is the Burmese language, but the English language shall be equally recognized as an official language. Nothing in this clause shall prevent special provisions being made by the Parliament of the Burma Free State (otherwise called and herein generally referred to as the " Wunthanu . . . ") for districts or areas in which only one language is in general use.

Clause 5. No title of honour in respect of any services rendered in or in relation to the Burma Free State (Myanma Shwe Pyigyi) may be conferred on any citizen of the Burma Free State (Myanma Shwe Pyigyi) except with the approval or upon the advice of the Executive Council of the State.

Clause 6. The liberty of the person is inviolable, and no person shall be deprived of his liberty except in accordance with law. Upon complaint made by or on behalf of any person that he is being unlawfully detained, the High Court and any and every Judge thereof shall forthwith enquire into the same and may make an order requiring the person in whose custody he shall be detained to produce the body of the person so detained before such Court or Judge without delay and to certify in writing as to the cause of the detention and such Court or Judge shall thereupon order the release of such person unless satisfied that he is being detained in accordance with the law.

Provided, however, that nothing contained in this Clause shall be involved to prohibit control or interfere with any act of the military forces of the Burma Free State (Myanma Shwe Pyigyi) during the existence of a state of war or armed rebellion.

Clause 7. The dwelling of each citizen is inviolable and shall not be forcibly entered except in accordance with law.

Clause 8. Freedom of conscience and the free profession and practice of religion are, subject to public order and morality, guaranteed to every citizen, and no law may be made either directly or indirectly to endow any religion, or prohibit or restrict the free exercise thereof or give any preference, or impose any disability on account of religious belief or religious status, or affect prejudicially the right of any child to attend a school receiving public money without attending the religious instruction at the school, or make any discrimination as respects State and between schools under the management of different religious denominations or divert from any religious denomination or any educational institution any of its property except for the purpose of roads, railways, lighting, water or drainage works or other works of public utility, and on payment of compensation.

Clause 9. The right of free expression of opinion as well as the right to assemble peaceably and without arms, and to form associations or unions, is guaranteed for purposes not opposed to public morality. Laws regulating the manner in which the right of forming associations and the right of free assembly may be exercised shall contain no political, religious or class distinction.

Clause 10. All citizens of the Burma Free State (Myanma Shwe Pyigyi) have the right to free elementary education.

Clause 11. All the lands and waters, mines and minerals, within the territory of the Burma Free State (Myanma Shwe Pyigyi) hitherto vested in the State, or any department thereof, or held for the public use or benefit, and all the lands and waters and islands that are the natural submerged extension of Cape Negrais within the territory of the Burma Free State (Myanma Shwe Pyigyi) including also Karenni on the East, adjoining Siam, also territory not yet precisely determined touching Tibet and China on the North and also the Naga Hills, Manipur, Cachar and adjoining tracts on the west to be subsequently determined, once under Burma, and also all the natural resources of these territories (including the air and all forms of potential energy), and also all royalties and franchises within these said territories shall, from and after the date of coming into operation of this Constitution, belong to the Burma Free State (Myanma Shwe Pyigyi), subject to any trusts, grants, leases or concessions then existing in respect thereof, or any valid private interest therein, and shall be controlled and administered by the " Wunthanu . . . " in accordance with such regulations and provisions as shall be from time to time approved by legislation, but the same shall not, nor shall any part thereof, be alienated, but may in the public interest be from time to time granted by way of lease or license to be worked or enjoyed under the authority and subject to the control of the " Wunthanu . . . " Provided that no such lease or license may be made for a term exceeding ninety-nine years, beginning from the date thereof, and no such lease or license may be renewable by the terms thereof.

Clause 12. A Legislature is hereby created to be known as the " Wunthanu . . . " It shall consist of the King and two Houses, the Chamber of Deputies (otherwise called and herein generally referred to as, " The Hlutdaw ") and the Second Chamber (otherwise called and herein generally referred to as " The Byedaik.") The sole and exclusive power of making laws for the peace, order and good government of the Burma Free State (Myanma Shwe Pyigyi) is vested in the " Wanthanu . . . "

Clause 13. The " Wunthanu . . . " shall sit in or near Rangoon or in such other place as from time to time it may determine.

Clause 14. All citizens of the Burma Free State (Myanma Shwe Pyigyi) without distinction of sex, who have reached the age of twenty-one years and who comply with the provisions of the prevailing electoral laws shall have the right to vote for members of the Hlutdaw and to take part in the Referendum, provided they are literate in their mother tongue. No voter may exercise more than one vote at an election to the Hlutdaw and the voting shall be by secret ballot. The mode and place of exercising this right shall be determined by law.

Clause 15. Every citizen who has reached the age of twenty-one years and who is not placed under disability or incapacity by the Constitution or by law shall be eligible to become a member of the Hlutdaw.

Clause 16. No person may be at the same time a member of both of the Hlutdaw and of the Byedaik and if any person who is already a member of either House is elected to be a member of the other House, he shall forthwith be deemed to have vacated his first seat.

Clause 17. The oath to be taken by members of the " Wunthanu . . . ," shall be in the following form :

> I,.....do solemnly swear true faith and allegiance to the Constitution of the Burma Free State, as by law established, and that I will be faithful to His Majesty King George V, his heirs and successors by law in virtue of the common citizenship of Burma with Great Britain and her adherence to and membership of the group of nations forming the British Commonwealth of Free Nations.

Such oath shall be taken and subscribed by every member of the " Wunthanu . . . " before taking his seat therein before the Representative of the Crown or some person authorized by him.

Clause 18. Every member of the " Wunthanu . . . " shall, except in case of treason, felony, or breach of the peace, be privileged from arrest in going to or returning from and while within the precincts of either House, and shall not, in respect of any utterance in either House, be amenable to any action or proceeding in any Court other than the House itself.

Clause 19. All official reports and publications of the " Wunthanu . . . " or of either House thereof shall be privileged and utterances made in either House, wherever published shall be privileged.

Clause 20. Each House shall make its own Rules and Standing Orders, with power to attach penalties for their infringement and shall have power to ensure freedom of debate, to protect its official documents and the private papers of its members and to protect itself and its members against any person or persons interfering with, molesting or attempting to corrupt its members in the exercise of their duties.

Clause 21. Each shall elect its own Chairman and Deputy Chairman and shall prescribe their powers, duties, remuneration and terms of office.

The member of the Hlutdaw who is the Chairman of the Hlutdaw immediately before a dissolution of the " Wunthanu . . . " shall, unless before such dissolution, he announces to the Hlutdaw that he does not desire to continue to be a member thereof be deemed without any actual election to be elected in accordance with this Constitution at the ensuing general election as a member of the Hlutdaw for the constituency for which he was a member immediately before such dissolution or, in the event of a revision of constituencies having taken place, for the revised constituency declared on such revision to correspond to such first-mentioned constituency. Whenever a former Chairman of the Hlutdaw is so deemed to have been elected at a general election as a member for a constituency the number of members actually to be elected for such constituency at such general election shall be one less than would otherwise be required to be elected therefor.

Clause 22. All matters in each House shall, save as otherwise provided by this Constitution, be determined by a majority of the votes of the members present other than the Chairman or presiding member who shall have and exercise a casting vote in the case of an equality of votes. The number of members necessary to constitute a meeting of either House for the exercise of its powers shall be determined by its Standing Orders.

Clause 23. The " Wunthanu . . . " shall make provision for the payment of its members and may in addition provide them with free travelling facilities in any part of Burma.

Clause 24. The " Wunthanu . . . " shall hold at least one session each year. The Wunthanu . . . " shall be summoned and dissolved by the Representative of the Crown in the name of the King and subject as aforesaid, the Hlutdaw shall fix the date of reassembly of the " Wunthanu . . . " and the date of the conclusion of the session of each House. Provided that the sessions of Byedaik shall not be concluded without its own consent.

Clause 25. Sittings of each House of the " Wunthanu . . . " shall be public. In case of special emergency either House may hold a private sitting with the consent of two-thirds of the members present.

Clause 26. The Hlutdaw shall be composed of members who represent constituencies determined by law. The number of members shall be fixed from time to time by the " Wunthanu . . . " but the total number of members of the Hlutdaw (exclusive of members for the Universities) shall not be fixed at less than one member for each one hundred thousand of the population or at more than one member for each seventy thousand of the population : Provided that the proportion between the number of members to be elected at any time for each constituency, as ascertained at the last preceding census shall, so far as possible, be identical throughout the country. The members shall be elected upon principles of Proportional Representation. The " Wunthanu . . . " shall revise the constituencies at least once in every ten years, with due regard to changes in distribution of the population, but any alterations in the constituencies shall not take effect during the life of the Hlutdaw sitting when such revision is made.

Clause 27. Each University in the Burma Free State (Myanma Shwe Pyigyi,) which was in existence at the date of the coming into operation of this constitution, shall be entitled to elect three representatives to the Hlutdaw upon a franchise and in a manner to be prescribed by law.

Clause 28. At a General Election for the Hlutdaw the polls (exclusive of those for members for the Universities) shall be held on the same day throughout the country, and that day shall be a day not later than thirty days after the date of the dissolution. The Hlutdaw shall meet within one month of such day and shall unless earlier dissolved continue for four years or for such shorter period as may be fixed by legislation from the date of its first meeting, and not longer. The Hlutdaw may not at any time be dissolved except on the advice of the Executive Council.

Clause 29. In case of death, resignation or disqualification of a member of the Hlutdaw, the vacancy shall be filled by election in manner to be determined by law.

Clause 30. The Byedaik shall be composed of citizens who shall be proposed on the grounds that they have done honour to the Nation by reason of useful public service or that, because of special qualifications or attainments, they represent important aspects of the Nation's life.

Clause 31. The number of members of the Byedaik shall be thirty-six and may not exceed sixty. A citizen to be eligible for membership of the Byedaik must be a person eligible to become a member of the Hlutdaw and must have reached the age of thirty years. Subject to any provision for the constitution of the first Byedaik the term of office of a member of the Byedaik shall be nine years.

Clause 31A. The duration of the term of office of a member of the first Byedaik shall be reckoned from the beginning of the day on which this constitution comes into operation, and the duration of the term of office of a member of the Byedaik elected under Clause 32 of this constitution shall be reckoned from the beginning of the appropriate triennial anniversary of that day.

Clause 32. One third of the members of the Byedaik shall be elected every three years from a panel constituted as hereafter mentioned at an election at which the electors shall be the members of the Hlutdaw and the members of the Byedaik voting together on principles of Proportional Representation. The voting at such elections shall be by secret ballot and no elector may exercise more than one vote thereat. The place and conduct of such elections shall be regulated by law.

Clause 32A. An election of members of the Byedaik under Clause 32 of this Constitution may be held at any time not more than three months before nor more than three months after the conclusion of the period of three years mentioned in that Clause.

A person who, after the day appointed by law for the completion of the formation of the panel of candidates and before the conclusion of the three years period running on that day, is chosen under Clause 34 of this Constitution to fill a vacancy caused by the death, resignation, or disqualification of a member of the Byedaik (other than a member about to retire at the conclusion of the said period) shall hold office until the conclusion of the next three years period and shall then retire.

Clause 33. Before each election of members of the Byedaik a panel shall be formed consisting of :—

(a) Three times as many qualified persons as there are members to be elected of whom two-thirds shall be nominated by the Hlutdaw voting according to the principles of Proportional Representation and one-third shall be nominated by the Byedaik voting according to principles of Proportional Representation ; and

(b) Such persons who have at any time been members of the Byedaik (including members about to retire) as signify by notice in writing addressed to the President of the Executive Council their desire to be included in the panel.

The method of proposal and selection for nomination shall be decided by the Hlutdaw and the Byedaik respectively, with special reference to the necessity for arranging for the representation of important interests and institutions in the country, provided that each proposal shall be in writing and shall state the qualifications of the person proposed and that no person shall be proposed without his own consent. As soon as the panel has been formed a list of the names of the members of the panel arranged in alphabetical order with their qualifications shall be published.

Clause 34. In the case of death, resignation, or disqualification of a member of the Byedaik his place shall be filled by a vote of the Byedaik. Any member of the Byedaik so chosen shall retire from office at the conclusion of the three years period then running and the vacancy thus created shall be additional to the places to be filled under Clause 32 of this Constitution. The term of office of the members chosen at the election after the first fifteen elected shall conclude at the end of the period or periods at which the member or members of the Byedaik, by whose death or withdrawal, the vacancy or vacancies was or were originally created, would be due to retire : Provided that the tenth or sixteenth member shall be deemed to have filled the vacancy first created by the death or withdrawal of the member or one of the members, the unexpired period of whose term of office was greatest at the time of the election, and so on.

Clause 35. The Hlutdaw shall in relation to the subject matter of Money Bills as hereinafter defined have legislative authority exclusive of the Byedaik.

A Money Bill means a Bill which contains only provisions dealing with all or any of the following subjects, namely, the imposition, repeal, remission, alteration or regulation of taxation, the imposition for the payment of debt or other financial purposes of charges on public moneys or the variation or repeal of any such charges, supply, the appropriation, receipt, custody, issue or audit of accounts of public money, the raising or guarantee of any loan or the repayment thereof, subordinate matters incidental to those subjects or any of them. In this definition the expressions, " taxation " " public money " and " loan " respectively, do not include any taxation, money, or loan raised by local authorities or bodies for local purposes.

The Chairman of the Hlutdaw shall certify any Bill which in his opinion is a Money Bill to be a Money Bill, but if within seven days after any Bill has been certified by the Chairman of the Hlutdaw to be a Money Bill or after a Bill so certified has been passed by the Hlutdaw, whichever shall last happen, two-fifths of the members of either House by notice in writing addressed to the Chairman of the House of which they are members so require, or a majority of the members of the Byedaik present and voting at a sitting of the Byedaik at which not less than thirty members are present so resolve, the question whether the Bill is or is not a Money Bill shall be referred to a Committee of Privileges consisting of three members elected by each House with a chairman who shall be the senior judge of the Supreme Court, able and willing to act, and who, in the case of an equality of votes, but not otherwise, shall be entitled to vote. The decision of the Committee shall be final and conclusive.

Clause 36. The Hlutdaw shall as soon as possible after the commencement of each financial year, consider the estimates of receipts and expenditure of the Burma Free State (Myanma Shwe Pyigyi) for that year and, save in so far as may be provided by specific enactment in each case, the legislation required to give effect to the Financial Resolutions of each year shall be enacted within that year.

Clause 37. Money shall not be appropriated by vote, resolution or law, unless the purpose of the appropriation has in the same session been recommended by a message from the representative of the Crown acting on the advice of the Executive Council.

Clause 38. Every Bill initiated in and passed by the Hlutdaw shall be sent to the Byedaik and may, unless it be a Money Bill, be amended in the Byedaik and the Hlutdaw shall consider any such amendment. Every Money Bill shall be sent to the Byedaik for its recommendations and at a period not longer than twenty-one days after it shall have been sent to the Byedaik, it shall be returned to the Hlutdaw, which may pass it, accepting or rejecting all or any of the recommendations of the Byedaik, and as so passed or if not returned within such period of twenty-one days shall be deemed to have been passed by both Houses.

Clause 38A. Whenever a Bill (not being a Money Bill) initiated on and passed by the Hlutdaw and sent to the Byedaik is within the stated period hereinafter defined either rejected by the Byedaik or passed by the Byedaik with amendments to which the Hlutdaw does not agree or is neither passed (with or without amendment) nor rejected by the Byedaik within the said stated period, the Hlutdaw may within one year after the said stated period by resolution expressly passed under this Clause again send such Bill to the Byedaik in the form (save only for such modifications as are hereinafter authorised) in which it was first so sent, and if the Byedaik does not, within sixty days thereafter or such longer period as may be agreed to by both Houses, pass such amendments only as agreed to by the Hlutdaw, such Bill shall, if the Hlutdaw so resolves after the expiration of such sixty days or longer period aforesaid be deemed to have been passed by both Houses or the " Wunthanu . . . " at the expiration of the said sixty days or longer period aforesaid in the form in which it was so last sent to the Byedaik with such (if any) amendments as may have been made therein by the Byedaik and agreed to by the Hlutdaw.

The said stated period is the period commencing on the day on which the said Bill is first sent by the Hlutdaw to the Byedaik and ending at whichever of the following times is the earlier, that is to say, the expiration of eighteen months from the commencement of the said period or the date of the reassembly of the " Wunthanu . . ." after a resolution occurring after the commencement of the said period.

When a Bill initiated in and passed by the Byedaik is amended by the Hlutdaw, such a Bill shall be deemed to have been initiated in the Hlutdaw and this Clause shall apply to such Bill accordingly and for the purpose of such application the said stated period shall, in relation to such Bill, commence on the day on which such Bill is first sent to the Byedaik after being amended by the Hlutdaw.

Whenever a Bill has been sent by the Hlutdaw to the Byedaik nothing in this clause shall operate to restrict the right of the Hlutdaw to send such Bill on any subsequent occasion to the Byedaik otherwise than under this clause, and when such Bill is so sent to the Byedaik this clause shall apply as if such subsequent occasion were the first occasion on which such Bill was sent by the Hlutdaw to the Byedaik.

A Bill sent a second time by the Hlutdaw to Byedaik and required for the purposes of this clause to be in the form in which it was first so sent may contain such (if any) modifications as shall be certified by the Chairman of the Hlutdaw to represent amendments made therein by the Byedaik and agreed to by the Hlutdaw or to be necessary owing to the lapse of time since such Bill was first sent by the Hlutdaw to the Byedaik.

Clause 39. A Bill may be initiated in the Byedaik and if passed by the Byedaik shall be introduced into the Hlutdaw. If amended by the Hlutdaw the Bill shall be considered as a Bill initiated in the Hlutdaw. If rejected by the Hlutdaw it shall not be introduced again in the same session but the Hlutdaw may reconsider its own motion.

Clause 40. A Bill passed by either House and accepted by the other House shall be deemed to be passed by both Houses.

Clause 41. As soon as any Bill shall have been passed or deemed to have been passed by both Houses, the Executive Council shall present the same to the Representative of the Crown for the signification by him in the King's name of the King's assent, and such Representative may withhold the King's assent or reserve the Bill for the signification of the King's pleasure: Provided that the Representative of the Crown shall in the withholding of such assent to or the reservation of any Bill, act in accordance with the law, practice, and Constitutional usage governing the like withholding of assent or reservation, in the Dominion of the Burma Free State.

A Bill reserved for the signification of the King's Pleasure shall not have any force unless and until within one year from the day on which it was presented to the Representative of the Crown for the King's assent, the Representative of the Crown signifies by speech or message to each of the Houses of " Wunthanu . . ." or, by proclamation, that it has received the assent of the King in Council.

An entry of every such speech, message or proclamation shall be made in the journal of each House and a duplicate thereof duly attested shall be delivered to the proper officer to be kept among the Records of the Burma Free State (Myanma Shwe Pyigyi).

Clause 42. As soon as may be after any law has received the King's assent, the clerk or such officer as the Hlutdaw may appoint for the purpose shall cause two fair copies of such law to be made, one being in the Burmese language and the other in the English language (one of which copies shall be signed by the Representative of the Crown to be enrolled for record in the office of such officer of the Supreme Court as the Hlutdaw may determine), and such copies shall be conclusive evidence as to the provisions of every such law and in case of conflict between the two copies so deposited that signed by the Representative of the Crown shall prevail.

Clause 43. The " Wunthanu . . ." shall have no power to declare acts to be infringements of the law which were not so at the date of their commission.

Clause 44. The " Wunthanu . . ." may create subordinate Legislatures with such persons as may be decided by law.

Clause 45. The " Wunthanu . . ." may provide for the establishment of Functional or Vocational Councils representing branches of the social and economic life of the Nation. A law establishing any such Council shall determine its powers, rights and duties, and its relation to the Government of the Burma Free State (Myanma Shwe Pyigyi).

Clause 46. The " Wunthanu . . ." has the exclusive right to regulate the raising and maintaining of such armed forces as are mentioned in the Scheduled Treaty in the territory of the Burma Free State (Myanma Shwe Pyigyi) and every such force shall be subject to the control of the " Wunthanu . . ."

Clause 47. Save in the case of actual invasion, the Burma Free State (Myanma Shwe Pyigyi) shall not be committed to active participation in any war without the assent of the " Wunthanu . . ."

Clause 48. Amendments of this Constitution within the terms of the Scheduled Treaty may be made by the " Wunthanu . . ." but no such amendment, passed by both Houses of the " Wunthanu . . ." after the expiration of a period of eight years from the date of coming into operation of this Constitution shall become law, unless the same shall after it has been passed or deemed to have been passed by the said two Houses of the " Wunthanu . . ." have been submitted to a Referendum of the people, and unless a majority of the voters on the register shall have recorded their votes on such Referendum, and either the votes of a majority of the voters on the register, or two-thirds of the votes recorded shall have been cast in favour of such amendment. Any such amendment may be made within the said period of eight years by way of ordinary legislation.

Clause 49. The Executive Authority of the Burma Free State (Myanma Shwe Pyigyi) is hereby declared to be vested in the King, and shall be exercisable in accordance with the law, practice and constitutional usage governing the exercise of the Executive Authority in the case of the Dominion of the Irish Free State, by the Representative of the Crown. There shall be a Council to aid and advise in the government of the Burma Free State (Myanma Shwe Pyigyi) to be styled the Executive Council. The Executive Council shall be responsible to the Hlutdaw, and shall consist of not more than twelve nor less than five ministers appointed by the Representative of the Crown on the nomination of the President of the Executive Council.

Clause 50. Those Ministers who form the Executive Council shall all be members of the Hlutdaw and shall include the President of the Council, the Vice-President of the Council, and the Minister in charge of the Department of Finance.

Clause 51. The President of the Council shall be appointed on the nomination of the Hlutdaw. He shall nominate a Vice-President of the Council, who shall act for all purposes in the place of the President, if the President shall die, resign, or be permanently incapacitated, until a new President of the Council shall have been elected. The Vice-President shall also act in the place of the President during his temporary absence. The other ministers who are to hold office as members of the Executive Council shall be appointed on the nomination of the President, with the assent of the Hlutdaw, and he and the ministers nominated by him shall retire from office should he cease to retain the support of a majority in the Hlutdaw, but the President and such ministers shall continue to carry on their duties until their successors shall have been appointed: Provided, however, that the " Wunthanu . . ." shall not be dissolved on the advice of an Executive Council which has ceased to retain the support of a majority in the Hlutdaw.

Clause 52. The Executive Council shall be collectively responsible for all matters concerning the Department of State administered by Members of the Executive Council. The Executive Council shall prepare Estimates of the receipts and expenditure of the Burma Free State (Myanma Shwe Pyigyi) for each financial year, and shall present them to the Hlutdaw before the close of the previous financial year. The Executive Council shall meet and act as a collective authority.

Clause 53. Ministers who shall not be members of the Executive Council may be appointed by the Representative of the Crown and shall comply with the provisions of clause 17 of this Constitution. Every such Minister shall be nominated by the Hlutdaw on the recommendation of a Committee of the Hlutdaw chosen by a method to be determined by the Hlutdaw, so as to be impartially representative of the Hlutdaw. Should a recommendation be not acceptable to the Hlutdaw, the Committee may continue to recommend names until one is found to be acceptable. The total number of Ministers including the Ministers of the Executive Council, shall not exceed twelve.

Clause 54. Every Minister who is not a member of the Executive Council shall be the responsible head of the Department or Departments under his charge, and shall be individually responsible to the Hlutdaw alone for the administration of the Department or Departments of which he is the head : Provided that should arrangements for Functional or Vocational Councils be made by the " Wunthanu . . ." these Ministers or any of them may, should the " Wunthanu . . ." so decide, be members of, and be recommended to the Hlutdaw by such Councils. The term of office of any Minister, not a member of the Executive Council, shall be the term of the Hlutdaw existing at the time of his appointment. But he shall continue in office until his successor shall have been appointed, and no such Minister shall be removed from office during his term otherwise than by the Hlutdaw itself, and then for stated reasons, and after the proposal to remove him has been submitted to a Committee, chosen by a method to be determined by the Hlutdaw, so as to be impartially representative of the Hlutdaw and the Committee has reported thereon.

Clause 55. Every Minister shall have the right to attend and be heard in the Byedaik.

Clause 56. The appointment of a member of the Hlutdaw to be a minister shall not entail upon him any obligation to resign his seat or to submit himself for re-election.

Clause 57. Ministers receive such remuneration as may from time to time be prescribed by law, but the remuneration of any Minister shall not be diminished during his term of office.

Clause 58. The Representative of the Crown who shall be styled the Governor-General of the Burma Free State (Myanma Shwe Pyigyi) shall be appointed in like manner as the Governor-General of the Irish Free State and in accordance with the practice observed in the making of such appointments. His salary shall be of the like amount as that now payable to the Governor-General of, say, the Irish Free State, and shall be charged on the public funds of the Burma Free State (Myanma Shwe Pyigyi) and suitable provision shall be made out of these funds for the maintenance of his official residence and establishment.

Clause 59. All revenues of the Burma Free State (Myanma Shwe Pyigyi) from whatever source arising, shall, subject to such exception as may be provided by law, form one fund which shall be called and known as " The Central Fund of the Myanma Shwe Pyigyi," and may for brevity be referred to as " The Central Fund," and shall be appropriated for the purposes of the Burma Free State (Myanma Shwe Pyigyi) in the manner and subject to the charges and liabilities imposed by law.

Clause 60. The Hlutdaw shall appoint a Comptroller and Auditor-General to act on behalf of the Burma Free State (Myanma Shwe Pyigyi). He shall control all disbursements and shall audit all accounts of moneys administered by or under authority of the " Wunthanu . . ." and shall report to the Hlutdaw at stated periods to be determined by law.

Clause 61. The Comptroller and Auditor-General shall not be removed except for stated misbehaviour or incapacity on resolutions passed by the Hlutdaw and the Byedaik. Subject to this provision the terms and conditions of his tenure of office shall be fixed by law. He shall not be a member of the " Wunthanu . . ." nor shall he hold any other office or position of emolument.

Clause 62. The judicial power of the Burma Free State (Myanma Shwe Pyigyi) shall be exercised and justice administered in the public courts established by the " Wunthanu . . ." by judges appointed in manner hereinafter provided. These Courts shall comprise Courts of First Instance and a Court of Final Appeal to be called the Supreme Court. The Courts of First Instance shall include a High Court, invested with full original jurisdiction in and power to determine all matters and questions whether of law or fact, civil or criminal and also Courts of local and limited jurisdiction with a right of appeal as determined by law.

Clause 63. The judicial power of the High Court shall extend to the question of the validity of any law, having regard to the provisions of the Constitution. In all cases in which such matters shall come into question, the High Court alone shall exercise original jurisdiction.

Clause 64. The Supreme Court of the Burma Free State (Myanma Shwe Pyigyi) shall, with such exceptions (not including cases which involve questions as to the validity of any law) and subject to such regulations as may be prescribed by law have appellate jurisdiction from all decisions of the High Court. The decisions of the Supreme Court shall in all cases be final and conclusive, and shall not be reviewed or capable of being reviewed by any other Court, Tribunal or Authority whatsoever : Provided that nothing in this Constitution shall impair the right of any person to petition His Majesty for special leave to appeal from the Supreme Court to His Majesty in Council or the right of His Majesty to grant such leave.

Clause 65. The number of judges, the constitution and organization of, and distribution of business and jurisdiction among the said Courts and judges, and all matters of procedure shall be as prescribed by the laws for the time being in force and the regulations made thereunder.

Clause 66. The judges of the Supreme Court and of the High Court and of all other courts established in pursuance of this constitution shall be appointed by the Representative of the Crown on the advice of the Executive Council. The judges of the Supreme Court and of the High Court shall not be removed except for stated misbehaviour or incapacity, and then only by resolutions passed by both the Hlutdaw and the Byedaik. The age of retirement, the remuneration and the pension of such judges on retirement and the declarations to be taken by them on appointment shall be prescribed by law. Such remuneration may not be diminished during their continuance in office. The terms of appointment of the judges of such other courts as may be created shall be prescribed by law.

Clause 67. All judges shall be independent in the exercise of their functions, and subject only to the Constitution and the law. A judge shall not be eligible to sit in the " Wunthanu . . . " and shall not hold any other office or position of emolument.

Clause 68. No one shall be tried save in due course of law and extraordinary courts shall not be established save only such Military Tribunals as may be authorised by law for dealing with military offenders against military law. The jurisdiction of Military Tribunals shall not be extended to or exercised over the civil population save in time of war or armed rebellion and for acts committed in time of war or armed rebellion and in accordance with the regulations to be prescribed by law. Such jurisdiction shall not be exercised in any area in which all civil courts are open or capable of being held, and no person shall be removed from one area to another for the purpose of creating such jurisdiction.

Clause 69. A member of the armed forces of the Burma Free State (Myanma Shwe Pyigyi) not on active service shall not be tried by any Court Martial or other Military Tribunal for an offence cognizable by the Civil Courts, unless such offence shall have been brought expressly within the jurisdiction of Courts Martial or other Military Tribunal by any code of laws or regulations for the enforcement of military discipline which may be hereafter approved by the "Wunthanu . . ."

Clause 70. No person shall be tried on any criminal charge without a jury save in the case of charges in respect of minor offences triable by law before a Court of Summary Jurisdiction and in the case of charges for offences against military law triable by Court Martial or other Military Tribunal.

TRANSITORY PROVISIONS.

Clause 71. Subject to this Constitution and to the extent to which they are not inconsistent therewith, the laws in force in the Burma Free State (Myanma Shwe Pyigyi) at the date of coming into operation of this Constitution shall continue to be of full force and effect until the same or any of them shall have been repealed or amended by enactment of the "Wunthanu . . ."

Clause 72. Nothing in this Constitution shall affect any liability to pay any tax or duty payable in respect of the financial year current at the date of the coming into operation of this constitution or any preceding financial year, or in respect of any period ending on or before the last day of the said current financial year, or payable on any occasion happening within that or any preceding year, or the amount of such liability; and during the said current financial year all taxes and duties and arrears thereof shall continue to be assessed, levied and collected in like manner in all respects as immediately before this Constitution came into operation, subject to the like adjustments of the proceeds collected as theretofore applicable; and for that purpose the Executive Council shall have the like powers and be subject to the like liabilities as the Provisional Government.

Goods transported during the said current financial year from or to the Burma Free State (Myanma Shwe Pyigyi) to or from any part of India or Great Britain shall not, except so far as the Executive Council may otherwise direct, in respect of the forms to be used and the information to be furnished, be treated as goods exported or imported as the case may be.

For the purpose of this clause, the expression "financial year" means, as respects income-tax (including super-tax) the year of assessment, and as respects other taxes and duties, the year ending on the thirty-first day of March.

Clause 73. Until Courts have been established for the Burma Free State (Myanma Shwe Pyigyi) in accordance with this Constitution, the supreme Court of Judicature, District and Sessions Courts, Sub-divisional Courts, Township Courts and Courts of Summary Jurisdiction, as at present existing, shall for the time being continue to exercise the same jurisdiction as heretofore, and any judge or justice, being a member of any such Court, holding office at the time when this Constitution comes into operation, shall for the time being continue to be a member thereof and hold office by the like tenure and upon the like terms as heretofore, unless in the case of a judge of the said Supreme Court or of a district Court, he signifies to the Representative of the Crown his desire to resign. Any vacancies in any of the said Courts so continued may be filled by appointment made in like manner as appointments to judgeships in the Courts established under this Constitution: Provided that the provisions of Clause 64 of this Constitution as to the decisions of the Supreme Court established under this Constitution shall apply to decisions of the Court of Appeal continued by this Clause.

Clause 74. If any judge of the said Supreme Court of Judicature or of the present High Court of Judicature or of any of the said District Courts on the establishment of Courts under this Constitution, is not with his consent appointed to be a judge of any such Court, he shall, for the purpose of such favourable terms as may be determined for payment of fair compensation, be treated as if he had retired in consequence of the change of Government effected in pursuance of complete separation from India, but the rights so conferred shall be without prejudice to any rights or claims that he may have against the Government of India or the British Government.

Clause 75. Every existing officer of the Provisional Government at the date of the coming into operation of this Constitution (not being an officer whose services have been lent by the Government of India or the British Government to the Provisional Government) shall on that date be transferred to and become an officer of the Burma Free State (Myanma Shwe Pyigyi); and shall hold office by a tenure corresponding to his previous tenure.

Clause 76. Every such existing officer who was transferred from the Indian or the British Government by virtue of any transfer of services to the Provisional Government shall be entitled to the benefit of clause 74 of this Constitution.

Clause 77. The transfer of the administration of any public service, the administration of which was not before the date of the coming into operation of this Constitution transferred to the Provisional Government, shall be deferred until the 31st day of March, 1930, or such earlier or later date as may, after one month's previous notice in the Official Gazette, be fixed by the Executive Council, and such of the officers engaged in the administration of these services at the date of transfer, as may be determined in the manner hereinafter appearing shall be transferred to and become officers of the Burma Free State (Myanma Shwe Pyigyi); and clause 75 of this Constitution shall apply as if such officers were existing officers of the Provisional Government who had been transferred to that Government from the Indian or the British Government. The officers to be so transferred in respect of any services shall be determined in like manner as if the administration of the services had before the coming into operation of the Constitution been transferred to the Provisional Government.

Clause 78. As respects departmental property, assets, rights, and liabilities, the Government of the Burma Free State (Myanma Shwe Pyigyi) shall be regarded as the successors of the Provisional Government, and, to the extent to which functions of Indian or any department of the British Government become functions of the Government of the Burma Free State (Myanma Shwe Pyigyi), as the successors of such department of the Indian or British Government.

Clause 79. After the date on which this Constitution comes into operation the House of the Parliament elected in pursuance of the Burma Free State (Agreement) Act, 1930? (being the Constituent Assembly for the settlement of this Constitution) may, for a period not exceeding one year from that date, but subject to compliance by the members thereof with the provisions of clause 17 of this Constitution, exercise all the powers and authorities conferred on the Hlutdaw by this Constitution, and the first election for the Hlutdaw under clauses 26, 27 and 28 hereof shall take place as soon as possible after the expiration of such period.

Clause 80. Notwithstanding anything contained in clauses 14 and 33 hereof, the Byedaik shall be constituted immediately after the coming into operation of this Constitution in the manner following, that is to say:—

(a) The first Byedaik shall consist of thirty-six and may not exceed sixty members of whom one-half, i.e., eighteen or thirty as the number determined may be, shall be elected and the other half shall be nominated.

(b) The eighteen or thirty nominated members of the Byedaik shall be nominated by the President of the Executive Council, who shall, in making such nominations, have special regard to the providing of representation for groups or parties not then adequately represented in the Hlutdaw.

(c) The eighteen or thirty elected members of the Byedaik shall be elected by the Hlutdaw voting on principles of Proportional Representation.

(d) Of the eighteen or thirty nominated members, nine or fifteen elected by lot, shall hold office for the full period of nine years; the remaining nine or fifteen shall hold office for the period of six years.

(e) Of the eighteen or thirty elected members the first nine or fifteen elected shall hold office for the period of six years, the remaining nine or fifteen shall hold office for the period of three years.

(f) At the termination of the period of office of any such members, members shall be elected in their place in manner provided by clause 32 of this Constitution.

(g) Casual vacancies shall be filled in manner provided by clause 34 of this Constitution.

Clause 81. The passing and adoption of this Constitution by the Constituent Assembly and the British Parliament shall be announced as soon as may be, and not later than the sixth day of December, Nineteen Hundred and Thirty, by Proclamation of His Majesty, and this Constitution shall come into operation on the issue of such Proclamation.

Memorandum submitted by the Separation League, Rangoon, Burma.

MEMORANDUM ON THE DRAFT CONSTITUTION FOR BURMA.

The aims and objects of the League for the Separation of Burma from India are :—

(1) Separation of Burma from India, and
(2) Full Responsible Self-Government for Burma, within the Empire.

The League was launched into existence on the 3rd of September, 1928, when the organisers published the aims and objects of the League in the Local press and invited those who approved of these aims and objects to join the League. A Draft Constitution for Burma was drawn up by a Sub-Committee of the Executive Committee of the League, and at its meeting held on the 30th November, 1928, the Executive Committee of the League decided to invite the leading political organisations of Burma to a joint discussion of the Draft Constitution at an All-Parties Conference to be held on Saturday, the 12th of December, 1928. The organisations so invited were :—

The Burma Provincial Congress Committee,
U Chit Hlaing's G.C.B.A.,
The People's Party,
The National Parliamentary Organisation,
The Home Rule Party,
The Hundred Committee,
The Anglo-Indian and Domiciled European Association,
The British Burman Association,
U Shoe Thein's G.C.B.A.
The Mandalay Baho Organisation,
The Burma for Burmans' League,
The Constitutional Club,
The Karen National Association, and
The Wunthanu Central Organisation of Mandalay.

By an oversight on the part of the office, no invitation was issued to the Anglo-Indian and Domiciled European Federation, but Mr. Campagnac, the President of that body, was present at the earlier stages of the Conference. The Burma for Burmans' League, the British Burman Association, the Karen National Association, the Burma Provincial Congress Committee and the People's Party sent their representatives to the Conference. U Soe Thein's G.C.B.A. sent a reply expressing its views on the Draft Constitution. Besides sending its representative, the Karen National Association also sent a statement of criticisms of the Draft Constitution. The Parliamentary Organisation, the Wunthanu Central Organisation of Mandalay and the Anglo-Indian and Domiciled European Association replied stating their respective reasons for not attending the Conference. The replies received from these bodies are annexed hereto. No replies were received from the other organisations invited to the Conference.

The discussion at the joint Conference did not disclose any serious divergence of view on important matters except on the question of communal representation for Karens. The representative of the Karen National Association agreed that communal representation would be a serious obstacle to the growth of a national system of government, but he pressed the view that as the Karens were a backward race and as the majority of them feared that they would have no chance in open elections against the other races, a certain number of seats should be reserved for the Karens or at least such arrangements should be made as to ensure them a certain number of seats. The other representatives were all against communal representation being conceded to any particular community. Their view was that communal representation is not only vicious in principle but also not necessary in Burma in view of the fact that the electorate as shown by the experience of all the elections held since the inauguration of the Reforms are not swayed by racial or religious prejudice, but elect the candidates who they think would best serve them in the Council, irrespective of race or religion.

The views expressed at the Conference were placed before the Executive Committee and the Draft Constitution with such amendments as were considered necessary in the light of the criticisms received from the public and from the political organisations represented at the Conference was placed by the Executive Committee before the general meeting of the League, held on the 13th of December, 1928.

The Draft Constitution submitted to the Indian Statutory Commission was the same as that passed by the General Meeting. The General Meeting also empowered the Executive Committee to take all such measures as in the discretion of the Executive Committee are necessary or advisable for carrying out the aims and objects of the League. The Executive Committee, at its meeting held on the 15th of January, 1929, decided to submit to the Indian Statutory Commission the Draft Constitution together with a Memorandum explaining its nature and scope. Owing to various causes, the Sub-Committee charged with the task of preparing the Memorandum could not undertake it early and all that they could do within the limited time at their disposal was to produce a brief statement of the objects and reasons of the Draft Constitution.

Although the enrolment of members began only as recently as the 3rd of September last, and propaganda has so far been practically confined to the Press, the number of members has risen to 8,435, on the 30th January, 1929, thus demonstrating that the aims and objects of the League are already shared by the mass of the people of Burma and the Executive Committee hopes that before very long the movement organised by the League will spread over the length and breadth of Burma and become a truly national one. Public meetings have been held and are being held at various important centres such as Pegu, Mandalay, Moulmein, Bassein, etc., to express approval of the aims and objects of the League, and of its Draft Constitution.

The basic ideas on which the Draft Constitution rests are :—

(1) Separation of Burma from India, and
(2) Dominion Status for Burma.

SEPARATION OF BURMA FROM INDIA.

The claim for separation from India is not a new one. It was urged by the political missions sent from Burma to India and to England. The political missions to England had to drop the question of separation from India for the time being as it was advised that the British Government was too preoccupied to take up the question of separation and it would be easier to obtain from the British Government the same political concessions as the other provinces of India, and in dropping the question of separation from India and claiming the political concessions that had been granted to the major provinces of India, the Burmese missions were merely following the line of least resistance, reserving the question of separation from India for a more favourable opportunity. It was only after the split in the General Council of Burmese Associations when Indian politicians became influential in the counsels of the non-co-operating section that doubts began to be felt as to the good faith of the British Government and as to the wisdom of separating Burma from India before Dominion Status is secured by the joint efforts of India and Burma. The League is, however, confident that there is not a single Burman throughout the length and breadth of Burma who does not desire the separation of Burma from India coupled with Dominion Status for Burma, and that by far the greater portion of the Burmese people desire immediate and complete separation from India.

Nature has made Burma a self-contained country. For centuries before the annexation, Burma maintained a distinct political entity. Its people are as distinct from the people of India in race, religion, culture, customs and mental outlook as any two distinct peoples could possibly be. Burma became and remains an annexure to India not by reason of any natural affinity but only by force of British military conquest and occupation. Has Burma benefited by this artificial connection with India ? No doubt, Burma has inherited the administrative experience of India and Indians have contributed to its development in a way, but in all things that really matter to a nation, Burma has lost heavily by its connection with India.

Burma has lost its national individuality, and along with that, its national self-respect. Unrestricted Indian immigration has caused acute and widespread economic distress among the Burmese people. Cheap Indian labour has displaced Burmese labour to an alarming extent. Much of the land made culturable by Burmese labour and capital has passed into the hands of Indians. In short, unless the Burmese would descend to the low standard of living of the Indians, the Burmese would be ousted from all departments of life by the increasing pressure of Indians. Antiquated Indian marriage laws and customs are now in force to the prejudice of Burmese women and their offspring. Communalism with all its evils is taking root in Burma. As long as Burma remains a part of India, its manhood will never have a chance of acquiring military training. The pay and rations allowed to Indian soldiers and military policemen will not attract the right type of Burman to military service ; and the Burmese people, once famed as a race of soldiers, are now in the sorry plight of being protected by foreign mercenaries.

Even under the Reforms, Burma's position has not appreciably improved. No Burman nor any non-Burman, equipped with experience and knowledge of Burma's special needs, has been appointed either to the Council of the Secretary of State for India or to the Viceroy's Council. Burma's representation in the Council of State and the Indian Legislative Assembly is not sufficient to influence the course of legislation in the Indian legislature. When Burma's interests clash with those of India the former invariably suffer, e.g., the imposition of protective duties on iron and steel, on paper, and on hide and skins, the salt policy, the retention of duty on rice exported from Burma, the withholding of the Viceroy's assent from the Burma Sea-Passengers Tax Bill, the arbitrary disbandment of the Burmese military units. The nation-building departments under the charge of responsible ministers in Burma are starved and crippled for want of funds. It is generally felt in Burma that Burma gets little return from India for the central revenues collected here. In the absence of authoritative information on the subject, it cannot be said that the feeling is unjustified. So long as that feeling persists, the Government of Burma will not be able to persuade the people, already heavily taxed, to submit to further taxation even for the purposes of financing the nation-building departments.

The League does not anticipate that Burma need incur very heavy military expenditure when it becomes autonomous, as the League is convinced that the first Bill that will be passed by a truly National Parliament will be one requiring every Burman of age to undergo military training. In the considered opinion of the League the only solution for the difficulties which beset Burma is an immediate and complete separation of Burma from India. The League, therefore, urges upon the British Government to separate Burma from India at the earliest possible date and, as a preliminary thereto, to take all such measures as may be necessary to secure an equitable settlement of the outstanding questions between the two countries. The League urges also that in the meantime Burma may be admitted to such political advancement as may be conceded to India as a result of the revision of the existing Reforms.

The Reforms were ushered into Burma under most inauspicious circumstances. The grant of the Reforms to Burma was delayed and was made long after India had got them. The non-co-operation movement had spread from India to Burma and by the time the Reforms were actually introduced in Burma, Burma was already caught in the meshes of the non-co-operation movement. The General Council of Burmese Associations which was then directing Nationalist activities in Burma was split over the question of entry into the Reformed Council, the minority decided to enter the Reformed Council and work Dyarchy for all it was worth and the majority deciding to boycott the Reformed Council.

In spite however, of adverse circumstances, the first Council did some useful work, and even staunch boycotters began to recognize that Dyarchy was not the unmitigated evil they had believed it to be. The strongest party in the first Council was the Nationalist party, recruited from the co-operating section of the General Council of Burmese Associations and one of its leaders was appointed Minister of Education. Such success as was achieved by the first Council was largely due to the tactful handling of important questions of the day by the then Governor (Sir Harcourt Butler) and to the abstention of the then Home Minister (the late Sir Maung Kin) from party-politics. Sir Maung Kin was averse to forming a Government party and left the Ministers to shift for themselves. The result was that Government was sometimes defeated and Ministers had to consult the wishes of the elected members in order to maintain their position and carry on their duties.

A section of the boycotters entered the second Council in order, as they said, to " kill Dyarchy at close quarters." The second Council, however, disclosed all the inherent defects of Dyarchy. Sir Maung Kin who had died towards the end of the first Council was succeeded by one who apparently believed that it was the duty of the Home Member to organize and shepherd a strong Government party. Sir Maung Kin's successor toured the country just before the General Elections and rallied his forces for the coming fray. As in the first Council so in the second the strongest party in the Council was the Nationalist party. But no ministerial responsibility was given to it. Instead, a member who represented the Chinese Chamber of Commerce, a special constituency containing a preponderating foreign element and a member, who had been returned on the ticket of the Nationalist party and who about a week or two after his election resigned from the Nationalist Party, were appointed Minister of Forest and Minister of Education respectively, and subsequent to the appointment of these gentlemen as Ministers, a Party was formed to support them in the Council.

The party so formed consisted of special and communal representatives, nominated members and a few of the elected members. This party and the official bloc almost always voted together. As the ministers had no following of their own, and owed their position only to the conglomerate body euphemistically called the Independent Party and the official bloc, they lost all sense of responsibility to the elected members and became as " irresponsible " as the members of the Executive Council.

Government, always sure of a majority, treated the popular representatives with open contempt on many occasions. To illustrate how the unholy alliance between the Government party and the official bloc operated, it would be sufficient to cite two instances. A motion to set apart a sum of money for the translation of useful books from foreign languages into Burmese was brought up by a member of the Opposition. Government could not spare money for the purpose and decided to oppose it and the Government party voted with the official bloc. One of the spokesmen of that party who " knows no language but his own " stood up and strenuously opposed the motion which, if passed, would have benefited him and other people of his kind. Conversely, when the motion for the removal of sex-disqualification was brought up by a member of the Opposition, some of the influential members of the Government party brought up under the traditions of an age that is happily passed and not to be recalled, felt scandalised and opposed the motion " on principle." The officials had to do likewise, though, it must be said to their credit, some British Officials did not look happy when they had to walk into the " No " lobby.

There is hardly any reason to expect that matters would improve in the third Council. The present Home Member has been carrying on the policy of his immediate predecessor in office, only with less finesse. Members of the Government party in the second Council who stood for election to the third Council were heavily defeated at the polls but the Government was unrepentant. A scratch Party was formed. The Forest Minister who again was returned by the Chinese Chamber of Commerce was re-appointed Minister for Forest, and a Burmese Member who had no political nor administrative experience and who was hardly known even in his own profession was appointed Minister of Education. The position now is that there are no responsible Ministers. We have only highly paid mediocrities who are put in office by official support and who will remain in office only as long as they enjoy official confidence.

The League is in substantial agreement with the observations made by " Kerala Putra " in Chapter IV and Chaper V of his book, " The working of Dyarchy in the Provinces." In particular, the League agrees with the author when he says that Responsible Government even of a partial character, which was the purpose and object of the Reforms, has failed altogether to materialise, and it agrees with him also when he says that though Dyarchy in the Provinces " did not usher in Responsible Government even in the Transferred departments," it has, " in the Legislative and Conciliar aspects, resulted in considerable success. The administrative efficiency of the Provinces could not be said to have suffered, nor could the Services complain of a parliamentary inquisition into their conduct. The legislative work undertaken has been everywhere of a progressive and liberalising character and at least so far as the work of the Councils was concerned, all the fears entertained by the opponents of Indian Reforms have entirely been falsified."

The next question is as to how far and in what direction further political advancement should proceed. Dyarchy has served its purpose and a mere enlargement of the dyarchical system of Government would not satisfy any section of the politically-minded people of Burma. The present system must be supplanted by a unitary form of Government responsible to the Legislature. In the opinion of the League, there is no half-way house between Dyarchy and Dominion Government.

The Draft Constitution is modelled on the Constitution of the Irish Free State; certain provisions contained in the Nehru Scheme have also been incorporated in the Draft Constitution. While the people of Burma are secured by the Draft Constitution full opportunity to develop on the lines best suited to their national genius and traditions, necessary safeguards are provided in the Draft Constitution for the protection of legitimate vested interests.

A Constitution which has converted Ireland into a contented and willing partner of the British Commonwealth will have the same effect on the warm-hearted people of Burma who have been called the Irish of the East.

DRAFT CONSTITUTION OF THE FREE STATE OF BURMA.

Article 1. Burma shall be styled and known as the Free State of Burma.

STATUS.

Article 2. Burma shall have the same constitutional status in the Comity of Nations known as the British Empire as the Dominion of Canada, the Commonwealth of Australia, the Dominion of New Zealand, the Union of South Africa, and the Irish Free State with a Parliament having power to make laws for the peace, order and good government of Burma and an executive responsible to that Parliament.

OPERATION AND CONSTITUTION OF LAWS.

Article 3. This Act and all laws made thereunder by the Parliament of the Free State shall be binding on the Courts and people of every part of the Free State, notwithstanding anything in the laws of the Indian Legislature or of British Burma or in any Act of the United Kingdom extending to British Burma; and the laws of the Free State shall be enforced in all Burmese Territorial Waters.

CITIZENSHIP.

Article 4. The word " Citizen," whenever it occurs in this Constitution means :—

(a) Any Burman born in the Free State or the child born elsewhere to a Burman father, who was at the time of his birth a citizen of the Free State.

(b) Any other person born in the Free State and whose father or mother was also born in the Free State.

(c) Any person who being a British-born subject has ordinarily resided in the Free State for a period of not less than 20 years and to whom a certificate of domicile has been granted in the manner prescribed by law.

(d) Any foreign-born subject who is naturalised in the Free State under the law in force for the time being.

EXPLANATION. The word "Burman" means a person belonging to an indigenous race of the Free State of Burma.

NATIONAL LANGUAGE.

Article 5. The national language of the Free State is the Burmese language, but the English language shall be equally recognized as an official language.

Nothing in this Article shall prevent special provision being made by the Parliament of the Free State for districts or areas in which only one language is in general use.

FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS.

Article 6. (i) All powers of government and all authority, legislative, executive and judicial, are derived from the people and the same shall be exercised in the Free State of Burma through the organizations established by or under and in accord with this Constitution.

(ii) No person shall be deprived of his liberty nor shall his dwelling or property be entered, sequestered or confiscated save in accordance with law.

(iii) Freedom of conscience and the free profession and practice of religion are, subject to public order and morality, guaranteed to every citizen.

(iv.) The right of free expression of opinion, as well as the right to assemble peaceably and without arms, and to form associations or unions, is hereby guaranteed for purposes not opposed to public order or morality.

(v) All citizens in the Free State of Burma have the right of free elementary education.

(vi) All citizens are equal before the law and possess equal civic and legal rights.

(vii) There shall be no penal law, whether substantive or procedural, of a discriminative nature.

(viii) No person shall be punished for any act which was not punishable under the law at the time it was committed.

(ix) No punishment involving torture of any kind shall be lawful.

(x) Every citizen shall have the right to a writ of habeas corpus. Such right may be suspended in case of war or rebellion by an Act of Parliament or, if Parliament is not in session, by the Governor in Council and in such case he shall report the suspension to the Parliament at the earliest opportunity for such action as it may deem fit.

(xi) No person attending any school receiving State aid or other public money shall be compelled to attend the religious instruction that may be given in the school.

(xii) No person shall by reason of his religion, race or creed be prejudiced in any way in regard to public employment, office or honour or in the exercise of any trade or calling.

(xiii) Freedom of combination and association for the maintenance and improvement of labour and economic conditions is guaranteed to every one and of all occupations. All agreements and measures tending to restrict or obstruct such freedom are illegal.

(xiv) Parliament shall make suitable laws for the maintenance of health and fitness for work of all citizens, securing of a living for every worker, the protection of motherhood, welfare of children, and the economic consequences of old age, infirmity and unemployment.

(xv) Every citizen shall have a right to keep and bear arms in accordance with regulations made in that behalf.

(xvi) Men and women shall have equal rights as citizens.

PARLIAMENT.

Article 7. The legislative powers of the Free State shall be vested in a Parliament which shall consist of the King, the Senate and the Chamber of Deputies.

Article 8. The Governor shall be appointed by the King and may exercise in the Free State, during the King's pleasure but subject to this constitution, such powers and functions of the King as His Majesty may assign to him.

Article 9. (i) The Chamber of Deputies shall be composed of members who represent constituencies determined by law. The number of members shall be fixed from time to time by Parliament, but the total number of members of the Chamber (exclusive of members of the Universities) shall not be fixed at less than one member for each one hundred thousand of population provided that the population of each constituency, as ascertained at the last preceding census shall, so far as possible, be identical throughout the country. Parliament shall revise the constituencies at least once in every ten years with due regard to changes in distribution of the population, but any alteration in the constituencies shall not take effect during the life of the Chamber sitting when such revision is made.

(ii) The Rangoon University and such other university or universities as may be established in the Free State after the coming into operation of this Constitution shall each be entitled to elect one representative to the Chamber upon a franchise and in a manner to be prescribed by law.

Article 10. (i) All members of the Chamber of Deputies shall be elected.

(ii) In case of death, resignation or disqualification of a member of the Chamber the vacancy shall be filled by election in manner to be determined by law.

(iii) There shall be no communal representation.

(iv) There shall be no plural constituencies.

Article 11. (i) All citizens of the Free State without distinction of sex who have reached the age of 21 years and are not disqualified by law shall have the right to vote for members of the Chamber of Deputies.

(ii) Every citizen of either sex who has reached the age of 25 and is not disqualified by law shall be eligible to become a member of the Chamber of Deputies.

Article 12. The Senate shall consist of the following :—

(a) One representative of each district, other than the Rangoon Town District.

(b) Two representatives of the Rangoon Town District.

(c) One representative of the Mandalay Town, and (d) Seven members nominated by the Governor on the recommendation of the Prime Minister, to represent important interests and institutions in the country.

Article 13. (i) All citizens of the Free State without distinction of sex who have reached the age of 21 years and who possess the qualifications prescribed in Schedule A hereto annexed and are not disqualified by law shall have the right to vote for members of the Senate.

(ii) Every citizen of either sex who has reached the age of 30 years, and whose name is registered in the electoral roll of a constituency and is not disqualified by law, shall be eligible for election as a member of the Senate.

Article 14. (i) No person may be at the same time a member both of the Chamber of Deputies and the Senate, and if any person who is already a member of either House is elected to be a member of the other House, he shall forthwith be deemed to have vacated his first seat.

(ii) No voter may exercise more than one vote at an election to either House, and the voting shall be by secret ballot. The mode and place of exercising this right shall be determined by law.

Article 15. Every Chamber of Deputies shall continue for four years and every Senate shall continue for five years provided that (a) Either House of Parliament may be sooner dissolved by the Governor on the advice of the Executive Council.

(b) Any such period may be extended by the Governor on the advice of the Executive Council.

(c) After the dissolution of either House, the Governor shall appoint a date, not more than three months after the date of dissolution, for the next session of that House.

Article 16. The Governor may appoint such times and places for holding the sessions of either House of Parliament as he thinks fit and may also from time to time by notification or otherwise prorogue such sessions.

Article 17. Any meeting of either House may be adjourned by the person presiding.

Article 18. All questions in either House shall be determined by a majority of votes of members present other than the presiding member who shall, however, have and exercise a casting vote in the case of an equality of votes.

Article 19. The powers of either House may be exercised notwithstanding any vacancy therein.

Article 20. There shall be a Chairman of each House of Parliament who shall be a member of the House and shall be elected by the House. There shall also be a Deputy Chairman of each House who shall also be a member of the House and shall be similarly elected.

Article 21. The privileges, immunities and powers to be held, enjoyed and exercised by the Senate and by the Chamber of Deputies and the members thereof, respectively, shall be such as are from time to time defined by Act of Parliament of the Free State.

Article 22. Parliament shall, subject to the provisions of this Constitution, have powers to make laws—

(a) for the peace, order and good government of the Free State;

(b) for the Nationals and servants of the Free State, within as well as without and beyond Burma;

(c) for the Government officers, soldiers, airmen and followers in His Majesty's Burmese Forces, wherever they are serving in so far as they are not subject to the Army Act or the Air Force Act, and

(d) for all persons employed or serving in or belonging to the Royal Burmese Marine Service or the Burmese Navy.

Article 23. The powers of the Parliament with respect to Foreign Affairs shall be the same as exercised by the Self-governing Dominions.

Article 24. Provision may be made by rules under this Act for regulating the course of business and the preservation of order in the Houses of Parliament and as to the person to preside at their meetings in the absence of the Chairman and the Deputy Chairman; and the rules may provide for the number of members required to constitute a quorum and for prohibiting or regulating the asking of questions on, and the discussion of, any subjects specified in the rules.

Article 25. (i) Any Bill which appropriates revenues or monies for the ordinary annual services of the Free State Government shall deal only with such appropriations.

(ii) Bills imposing taxation shall deal only with an imposition of taxes and any provision therein dealing with any other matter shall be of no effect.

(iii) Bills affecting the public debt or for the appropriation of revenues or monies or for imposing taxation shall be introduced only by a member of the Executive Council and can only originate in the Chamber of Deputies.

Article 26. A Money Bill means a bill which contains only provisions dealing with all or any of the following subjects:—viz, the imposition, repeal, remission, alteration, or regulation of taxation; the imposition for the payment of debts or other financial purposes, of charges on public revenues or monies, or the variation or repeal of any such charges; supply; the appropriation, receipts, custody, issue, or audit of accounts of public monies; the raising of any loan or the repayment thereof; or subordinate matters incidental to those subjects or any of them. In this definition the expression "Taxation," "Public Money" and "Loan" respectively do not include any taxation, money or loan raised by local authorities or bodies for local purposes.

Article 27. The Chairman of the Chamber of Deputies shall certify any Bill which is in his opinion a Money Bill to be a Money Bill, but if within three days after a Bill has been passed by the Chamber of Deputies two-fifths of the members of either House by notice in writing addressed to the Chairman of the House of which they are members so require, the question whether the Bill is or is not a Money Bill shall be referred to a Committee of Privileges consisting of three members elected by each House with a Chairman who shall be the Senior Judge of the Supreme Court able and willing to act, and who, in case of an equality of votes, but not otherwise, shall be entitled to vote. The decision of the Committee on the question shall be final and conclusive.

Article 28. A Money Bill passed by the Chamber of Deputies shall be sent to the Senate for its recommendations and it shall be returned not later than twenty-one days therefrom to the Chamber of Deputies which may pass it accepting or rejecting all or any of the recommendations of the Senate; and the Bill so passed shall be deemed to have been passed by both Chambers.

Article 29. (i) Subject to the provisions of this Act, a Bill may be initiated in either House and if passed by the originating House shall be introduced in the other House for being passed.

(ii) Except as otherwise provided under this Act, a Bill shall not be deemed to have been passed by Parliament unless it has been agreed to by both Houses either without amendment or with such admendments only as may be agreed to by both Houses.

(ii) If any Bill which has been passed by the Chamber of Deputies is not, within six months after the passage of the Bill by that House, passed by the Senate, either without amendments or with such amendments as may be agreed to by both Houses, the Governor shall on resolution passed by either House to that effect refer the matter for decision to a joint sitting of both Houses. The members present at any such joint sitting may deliberate and shall vote together upon the Bill as last proposed by the Chamber of Deputies and upon amendments if any, which had been made therein by one House of Parliament and not agreed to by the other; and any such amendments which are affirmed by a majority of the total number of members of the Senate and the Chamber of Deputies present at such sitting shall be taken to have been duly passed by both Houses of Parliament.

Article 30. (i) So soon as any Bill shall have been passed or deemed to have been passed by both Houses, it shall be presented to the Governor for the signification by him in the King's name of the King's assent, and the Governor may signify such assent or withold the same or he may reserve the Bill for the signification of the King's pleasure.

(ii) A Bill passed by both Houses of Parliament shall not become an Act until the Governor signifies his assent thereto in the King's name, or in the case of a Bill reserved for signification of the King's pleasure until he signifies by speech or message to each House of Parliament or by proclamation that it has received the assent of the King in Council.

Provided that the Governor may, where a Bill has been passed by both Houses of Parliament and presented to him for the signification by him of the King's assent, or has been reserved by him for the signification of the King's pleasure, return the bill for reconsideration by Parliament with a recommendation that Parliament shall consider amendments thereto.

(iii) Any Bill so returned shall be further considered by Parliament together with the amendments recommended by the Governor, and if re-affirmed with or without amendments, may be again presented to the Governor for the signification by him in the King's name of the King's assent.

THE EXECUTIVE.

Article 31. The executive power of the Free State is vested in the King and is exercisable by the Governor as the King's representative acting on the advice of the executive council subject to the provisions of this Act and of the laws of the Free State.

Article 32. (i) There shall be an executive council consisting of the Prime Minister and, until the Parliament otherwise provides, not more than eight ministers of the Free State.

(ii) The Prime Minister shall be appointed by the Governor and the Ministers shall also be appointed by him on the advice of the Prime Minister, from among the elected members of Parliament.

(iii) The executive council shall be collectively responsible to the Chamber of Deputies for all matters concerning the departments of Free State administered by Members of the executive council.

Article 33. The Governor's salary shall unless Parliament otherwise provides, be of the like amount as that now payable to the Governor-General of the Commonwealth of Australia and shall be charged on the public funds of the Free State of Burma and suitable provision shall be made out of those funds for the maintenance of his official residence and establishment. The salary of the Governor shall not be altered during his continuance in office.

Article 34. Ministers shall receive such remunerations as may from time to time be prescribed by law, but the remuneration of any Minister shall not be altered during his term of office.

Article 35. Until Parliament otherwise provides the appointment and removal of all other officers of the executive government of the Free State shall be vested in the Governor in Council, unless delegated by him or by a law of the Free State to some other authority.

Article 36. The Command-in-Chief of the Military, Naval and Air Force of the Free State is vested in the Governor as the King's representative.

HIGH COMMISSIONERS AND FOREIGN REPRESENTATIVES.

Article 37. The Free State shall have the power to appoint High Commissioners and other Foreign Representatives similar to that exercised by Canada and other Dominions. Such appointments shall be made by the Governor in Council who shall also make provision by rules for their pay, powers, duties and conditions of employment.

COMPTROLLER AND AUDITOR-GENERAL.

Article 38. The Chamber of Deputies shall appoint a Comptroller and Auditor-General to act on behalf of the Free State of Burma. He shall control all disbursements and shall audit all accounts of monies administered by or under the authority of Parliament and shall report to the Chamber of Deputies at stated periods to be determined by law.

Article 39. The Comptroller and Auditor-General shall not be removed except for stated misbehaviour or incapacity on resolutions passed by the Chamber and the Senate. Subject to this provision the terms and conditions of his tenure of office shall be fixed by law. He shall not be a member of Parliament nor shall he hold any other office or position of emolument.

THE JUDICIARY.

Article 40. There shall be a Supreme Court which shall exercise such jurisdiction as Parliament shall determine. The Supreme Court shall consist of a Lord Chief Justice and so many other Justices as Parliament may fix.

Article 41. The Lord Chief Justice of the Free State and all other judges of the Supreme Court of the Free State to be appointed after the establishment of the Free State shall be appointed by the Governor in Council and shall receive such remuneration as Parliament shall prescribe and their remuneration shall not be diminished during their continuance in office.

Article 42. The Lord Chief Justice of the Free State and other Judges of the Supreme Court of the Free State shall not be removed from office except by the Governor in Council on an address from both Houses of Parliament in the same session praying for such removal on the ground of misbehaviour or incapacity.

Article 43. The judgment of the Supreme Court in all cases shall be final and conclusive and shall not be reviewed or be capable of being reviewed by any other Court, Tribunal or Authority whatsoever, provided that nothing in the Constitution shall impair the right of any person to petition His Majesty for special leave to appeal from the Supreme Court to His Majesty in Council or the right of His Majesty to grant such leave.

PROPERTY, REVENUE AND FINANCE.

Article 44. All the lands and waters, mines and minerals, within the territory of the Free State of Burma hitherto vested in the State or any department thereof, or held for the public use or benefit, and also all the natural resouces of the same territory (including the air and all forms of potential energy) and also all the royalties and franchises within that territory shall, from and after the date of the coming into operation of this Constitution, belong to the Free State of Burma, subject to any trusts, grants, leases, or concessions then existing in respect thereof, or any valid private interest therein, and shall be controlled and administered by Parliament, in accordance with such regulations and provisions as shall be from time to time approved by legislation, but the same shall not, nor shall any part thereof, be alienated, but may in the public interest be from time to time granted by way of lease or license to be worked or enjoyed under the authority and subject to the control of the Parliament.

Article 45. All revenues of the Free State of Burma from whatever source arising shall, subject to such exceptions as may be provided by law form one fund, and shall be appropriated for the purpose of the Free State of Burma in the manner and subject to the charges and liabilities imposed by law.

DEFENCE.

Article 46. As soon as may be after the establishment of the Free State, the Governor in Council shall appoint a Commission to examine the whole question of the recruitment and training of officers and men for the Land, Naval and Air Forces of the Free State. The Commission so appointed shall report to the Governor in Council respecting,

(a) The sources and methods of recruitment, conditions of service, pay and allowances.

(b) The requisite number of schools and colleges for military instruction, their staffs, the places where they are to be established and the standard of instruction to be imparted in each, and

(c) The estimated cost of its proposals.

Article 47. The Governor in Council shall lay the entire report of the said Commission together with his recommendations before the Parliament for such legislative or other action as it may deem fit.

Article 48. Parliament has the exclusive right to regulate the raising and maintaining of armed forces in the territory of the Free State, and every such force shall be subject to the authority and control of Parliament.

SERVICES.

Article 49. Subject to the provisions of the next succeeding Article, all officers of the Public Services shall at the establishment of the Free State become officers of the Free State.

Article 50. As soon as possible after the establishment of the Free State, the Governor in Council shall appoint a Public Service Commission to make recommendations for such reorganisation, and readjustment of the departments of the Public Services as may be necessary.

Article 51. Parliament may make laws for regulating the classification of the Civil Services in Burma, the sources and methods of their recruitment, their conditions of service, pay and allowances and discipline and conduct. Parliament may also, to such extent and in respect of such matters as it may prescribe, delegate the power of making rules under the said laws to the Governor in Council.

Article 52. (i) After the establishment of the Free State, the Governor in Council shall appoint a permanent Public Service Commission with such powers and duties relating to the recruitment, appointment, discipline, retirement, and superannuation of Public Officers, as Parliament shall determine.

(ii) Members of the Permanent Public Service Commission shall hold office for five years from the date of appointment.

Article 53. Any officer of the Public Services who desires to retire within three years of the establishment of the Free State or is not retained in the service of the Free State shall be entitled to receive such pension, gratuity or other compensation as he would have received in like circumstances if the Free State had not been established.

Article 54. All officers, British, Indian, and Burman, serving in the Army, the Navy, the Royal Indian Marine or the Air Force of India within the territory of the Free State at the commencement of the New Constitution, shall retain all their existing rights as to salaries, allowances or pensions or shall receive such compensation for the loss of any of them as the Governor in Council may consider just and equitable or as they would have received in like circumstances if the Free State had not been established. Further, all such officers, British, Indian, or Burman who were in receipt of pensions at the date of the commencement of the New Constitution shall continue to receive the same pension from the revenues of the Free State.

SHAN STATES.

Article 55. The Free State shall exercise the same rights in relation to, and discharge the same obligations towards the Shan States as the Government of India has hitherto exercised and discharged. In case of any difference between the Free State and any Shan State on any matter arising out of treaties, of engagements, sanads or similar other documents, the Governor in Council may, with the consent of the State concerned, refer the said matter to the Supreme Court for its decision.

NEW STATES.

Article 56. The Parliament may admit to the Free State, or establish New States, and may, upon such admission or establishment, make or impose such terms and conditions including the extent of representation in either House of Parliament as it thinks fit.

AMENDMENT OF CONSTITUTION.

Article 57. Parliament may, by law, repeal or alter any of the provisions of the Constitution provided that the Bill embodying such repeal or alteration shall be passed by both Houses of Parliament sitting together and at the third reading shall be agreed to by not less than two-thirds of the total number of the members of both Houses. A Bill so passed at such a joint sitting shall be taken to have been passed by both Houses of Parliament.

SCHEDULE " A " referred to in Article 13.

A person shall be qualified to vote at the elections to the Senate who has a place of residence in the constituency and who

(a) has paid, during and in respect of the previous agricultural year, land revenue amounting to not less than Rs. 100/–, or

(b) was in the previous financial year assessed to income-tax, or

(c) has been an elected member of the Burma Legislative Council, or

(d) is or has been a member of the Chamber of Deputies, or

(e) is or has been a Fellow, or an Honorary Fellow, or a Member of the Senate, of any University constituted by law in the Free State of Burma, or

(f) is the non-official Chairman or Vice-Chairman of a District Central Bank which is a society registered under the Co-operative Societies Act of 1912, or

(g) is or has been the President of the Rangoon Corporation, or is or has been President, or is the Vice-President of any Municipal Committee established under the Burma Municipal Act, 1898, or of a District Council.

Deputations from Burma for Burmans League and The Separation League.

(1) BURMA FOR BURMANS LEAGUE.

The deputation consisted of :—

SAYA MYO, A.M.P. (President).
U. E. MG, Barrister-at-Law (President, Insein Municipality).
Mr. GEORGE H. MUNRO.
U MYA U, Barrister-at-Law, of Mandalay.

(2) THE SEPARATION LEAGUE.

The deputation consisted of :—

U HLA TUN PRU, M.A., B.L. (M.L.A.)
U BA THEIN (Secretary).

The Chairman : I understand, gentlemen, that we have here U Mya U in support of the Memorandum of the Burma for Burmans League, and besides we have also before us U E Mg, Mr. George H. Munro and Saya Myo. And then as representing the Separation League we have before us U Hla Tun Pru, who is a member of the Legislative Assembly, and also U Ba Thein.

126. Sir Hari Singh Gour : U Mya U, in this document you have said that you want the separation of Burma from India and you have got a scheme for the Constitution of Burma ?—(U Mya U) Yes.

127. If you, gentlemen, get that Constitution for Burma, would you be still for separation ?—Yes.

128. And what is your reason for asking for the separation of Burma ?—Our reason for asking for the separation of Burma from India is that we want to keep our race by itself so that our race may not become extinct in the near future.

129. And do you think that your race is threatened with extinction now ?—Yes.

130. In what way ?—By means of the influx of other races into our country without any legislative restriction.

131. Then your primary object as soon as you get separation from India is to restrict the influx of non-Burman races into Burma ?—Not exactly that. Although we may keep friendly relations with India, there would be certain laws which would be promulgated from time to time with a view to safeguarding the interest and the development of our country. At the present moment on account of the inrush of non-Burmans into our country, the Burmans have been practically kept out in their homeland from various branches of the walks of life.

132. Then the sole object of your League is to keep the non-Burmans out ?—No, not to keep the non-Burmans out.

133. To restrict the non-Burmans ?—To restrict them to a certain extent, my main reason being this, that Burma could advance much more rapidly because of the non-existence of communalism in this country. So far as Burma is concerned we have no communalism here.

134. I quite recognise that, and I do not think that we need go into all that now. I know that you have no caste, no communalism, that you have one religion and all that, but I only wish to know your reasons. Your first objective would be to restrict the immigration of non-Burmans ?—No ; we want to place ourselves as a unit within the British Empire, and then to develop our country according to our own genius.

135. Yes, that of course is your main object, but how are you going to fulfil that ? You say that you are afraid of the Burman race becoming extinct on account of the influx of non-Burmans. What will be your restrictions ? Will they be something on the lines laid down in clause 3 of the Draft Constitution of the Burma Free State given in your Memorandum, viz., " Every person without distinction of sex, domiciled in the area of the " jurisdiction of the Burma Free State (Myanma " Sbwe Pyigyi) at the time of the coming into operation " of this constitution, who was born in Burma or " who has been ordinarily resident in the area of " the jurisdiction of the Burma Free State (Myanma " Sbwe Pyigyi) for not less than twenty-five years, " and claims Burmese citizenship, is a citizen of the " Burma Free State ? "—You start your Free State with citizens of that kind ?—Yes.

136. And all others will be excluded from your citizenship ?—Certainly.

137. Then all the other clauses that you have got in that book you would put into force as soon as you got the separation from India, or try to put them into force ?—Yes, we will try to put them into force.

138. In other words, the aim and objective of the Burma for Burmans League is in this constitution ? —Yes.

139. And either in one instalment, or in several instalments, you would like to give effect to that constitution which you have framed for the League ? —Immediately.

140. One more question and I have done. Will you recognise the commercial or industrial or the economic interest of non-Burmans in this country ? —Yes, it is quite safe.

141. To what extent ?—To a reasonable extent.

142. But who will determine the reasonableness of it, the Burmans ?—As a matter of fact, we are the persons who are to determine.

143. As regards your eastern defence, it was pointed out in your newspaper, New Burma, which was read out to us yesterday by Lord Burnham, that you want your own army, navy and air force. Is that also your objective ?—Yes.

144. You want to have your own army, your own navy, and your own air force, and you want to be a self-contained State ?—Yes.

145. What relations do you propose to establish with your adjacent country, India ?—The very same friendly relations all the time.

146. But always at a distance ?—No, not at a distance. We will have the utmost friendly relations with her with the greatest pleasure just as other self-governing Dominions have among themselves. The only thing that we want to protect is our own self, because we have now come of age as an institution, and so far as Burma is concerned what we want is not to throw off the yoke of Great Britain entirely, but we want to be independent, and at the same time within the British Empire.

147. Of course India wants to do the same. Everybody wants to be independent and also within the British Empire ?—Yes.

148. As regards your eastern frontier, you recognise that it is a vulnerable point ?—Yes.

149. And that it may be a point of attack ?—Yes.

150. And that with the development of the air force it is not so remote a point of contact now as it was a decade or two ago ?—Yes.

151. Will you give India any voice in the defence of the north-eastern frontier ?—That is purely an Imperial concern. And, furthermore, the north-eastern frontier is a sort of natural barrier to us, and there cannot possibly be any invasion except by the Chinese.

152. You would like to join the Pan-Buddhists Federation in which you have got Siam, Japan and the Pan-Buddhists Federation of Asia. Would you not like to join them and be immune from any attack from China ?—So far as we are concerned, our position is we want to be independent of India.

153. That is true, but in order to defend yourself against any attack from China, would you not like to join the Pan-Buddhists Federation of Asia ?—No, we are not afraid of Chinese attacks at all. If China makes an attempt to attack us, the whole of China would be attacked by the British Empire within six months' time.

154. Supposing China attacks India and not you, would you give India any voice in the shaping of the north-eastern frontier policy ?—Yes, undoubtedly.

155. You might be free from India, but would you like to place yourself under the Viceroy of India ?—No, we do not.

156. As a representative of the King ?—Not in the least. We want to have our own Viceroy directly dealing with Burma.

157. Mr. Rafi : U Mya U, you say on page 388 that out of 3,000,000 foreigners, 2,500,000 are Indians. Where did you obtain this figure from ?—I got it collected from the census and from other statistics.

158. To which year's census are you referring ?—The last census.

159. I understand from the 1921 census that the Indian population is 887,077, and that is why I am asking you this question ?—I should rather think that there are many who have been left out.

160. So that is your reason. Do you know that the increase in the Indian population in the period between 1911 and 1921 has been about half a lakh ? —It may or may not be ; I cannot definitely say unless I make a reference to the statistics and other sources of information regarding the Indian population.

161. You know the increase of Indians within the last 20 years has been 1·1 of the total population ? —It may be more than that.

162. Have you any reasons to think that it is more ?—Because some of them have been left out.

163. I see. Do you think that Indian labour in this country displaces Burmese labour ?—Yes, it displaces entirely.

164. To what extent can you say ?—To a very great extent.

165. That is to say Burmans are being turned out of their jobs as labourers ?—Yes.

166. In what field ?—Not only in the field of industry, but also in the field of agriculture.

167. Have you any figures to prove that ?—Oh, yes ; by referring you to the statistics.

168. One of the Government witnesses said the other day that Indian labour merely supplemented Burmese labour and did not displace it. Do you agree with that view ?—I do not agree. The Government witness must have based his opinion on the statistics sent to Government by their officers. But as far as I am concerned I am speaking with personal knowledge of both Lower Burma and Upper Burma ; I have seen it with my own eyes.

169. You have seen with your own eyes Burmese working and also Indians working in agricultural fields ?—No, not together ; I have never seen any Burman and Indian working together in any field except Rangoon, because Burmese find that their places have been taken away by Indian labourers who are paid very low.

170. Do you know how much an Indian labourer is paid for working in the paddy fields ?—I think the Indian labourer works for about Rs12 to Rs15 a month.

Mr. Rafi : I would like to come across an Indian labourer who charges only Rs12 a month.

171. Sir Hari Singh Gour : How much does a Burman labourer cost per month ?—Speaking for the whole of Burma, I think he will work for Rs30 a month and two meals. It should be admitted that the standard of living of the Burman labourer is higher than that of the Indian labourer.

172. Mr. Rafi : I take it that you have Burman clerks in your office ?—Yes.

173. What do you pay them ?—Rs80 a month.

174. How many have you (I am sorry I am rather inquisitive) ?—There is one head-clerk.

175. There are Burman clerks working in different offices on Rs30 a month ?—That depends on the circumstances. I do not think any graduate of the Burma University will work on less that Rs80 a month whereas an Indian graduate will work on Rs30 or Rs40 a month.

176. We are not talking of the Indian graduate. I just wanted to know whether or not Burman non-graduates work on Rs30 a month in offices ?—As I said, that depends on the circumstances. But I should think the number is not very large.

177. You say that the Chettiyars charge interest at rates varying from 15 to 60 per cent. What is your authority for making this statement ?—My own personal knowledge.

178. They charge 60 per cent. in exceptional cases or is it the rule ?—So far as 60 per cent. is concerned it is in exceptional cases.

179. Can you explain why Burmans have not taken to this profitable business of lending out money at 15 to 60 per cent. ?—Because the Burmans have consideration for their own people. If the money-lender happens to take away 60 per cent., practically in the near future the borrower would become bankrupt or insolvent. The Burman moneylenders would not do that in their own country.

180. How is it that the borrowers do not go to the considerate Burman to take money at cheap rates of interest, but prefer to go to the Chettiyars who charge 15 to 60 per cent. ?—For the sake of convenience they have to go there.

181. Lord Burnam : I think the simple reason is that Burmans have not got money to lend ?—That is also one of the reasons. A high standard of living means spending more money.

182. Mr. Rafi : Do you know that the Chettiyars are responsible for the conversion of waste lands of the delta into agricultural lands ?—They are not responsible. On the contrary I may say that all the lands now have gone to the hands of the Chettiyars. They are not, properly speaking, money-lenders ; they are landlords in Burma.

183. We will come to that next. Please answer my question as to whether they were instrumental in opening up the delta ?—So far as the delta is concerned I do not know.

184. I see you rely on the Singapore naval base for assistance in case of an emergency. Do you anticipate a naval attack ?—No, these are hypotheses. There are certain people who say that Burmans cannot defend their own country, but if you happen to look to our history you will see that Burmans are of a martial race.

185. What is the idea of relying on the Singapore naval base ?—Only for assistance in case of an emergency.

186. Sir Hari Singh Gour : You do not want to have your own submarines ?—India does not possess any.

187. But you will be poorer without submarines ? —No. That is why we want to be part and parcel of the British Empire.

188. Mr. Rafi : Do you know that the army in India is being gradually officered by Indians ?—Yes.

189. And would you not like the Burman army officered by Burmans ?—Quite so.

190. How is it that even after 20 years you expect your army to be officered by Europeans ?—Because we want to have training by British officers and not by Indian officers.

191. Why not by your own Burmese officers ?—Because we have not been given any opportunity so far.

192. Would you have separation without knowing what form of government you are going to get after separation ?—Undoubtedly. We have also some brains, and we can know what would be the consequences of the separation.

193. Do you expect that you will get Dominion status after separation ?—Undoubtedly. I think we can obtain Dominion status by remaining alone and not by being attached to India proper.

194. Your impression is that when once you get separation the inevitable result would be Dominion status ?—Yes.

195. I think you have already said that your idea is not to exclude Indians from this country ?—No.

196. Do you propose to take away the right of citizenship from those Indians and other foreigners who are here ?—If they happen to comply with our conditions like, say America, we do not exclude them from obtaining the citizenship of this country.

197. Lord Burnham : Everybody who goes to America acquires citizenship in two years. It is only a question now of restriction upon the quota, the number of immigrants from different countries. But all those who do go in acquire citizenship in two years. —I do not think that two years is quite enough. The Burmese will have no chance at all if we make it such a short period, because it has become a sort of cosmopolitan province here.

198. Mr. Rafi : Is your object in asking for separation to exclude Indians ?—Not in the least.

199. Or rather the foreign races ?—No, not in the least.

200. I cannot quite understand the position you have taken up. Everybody will be allowed to come in ?—Yes.

201. And become citizens ?—If they comply with our conditions.

202. How long would they have to remain ?

Sir Hari Singh Gour : He said 25 years.

203. Mr. Rafi : It will be more useful in the next world than in this then ! Is the intention to interfere with the rights of the people who have already vested interests in this country ?—No.

204. U Ba Shin : There are instances, as you know, of Burmese women marrying Indians. Which nationality do their children follow, the mother's nationality or the father's ?—The father's nationality.

205. In the case of a Chinaman ?—The father's nationality. Practically all. This is a very important question, sir, regarding the marriage of our Burmese women. This is the only country where the males of other nations of the world are allowed to get married according to the customs of the males who marry, and not according to the customs of our own people, in order to be a valid marriage.

206. Raja Nawab Ali Khan : On page 387 of your Memorandum (Memorandum of the Burma for Burmans League) I find : "The first and most "important resolution, viz., That Burma shall be "entirely and immediately separated from India and "granted Dominion Home Rule." I want to know how, in the face of this resolution, you say that Burma should be separated whether you get Dominion Home Rule or not. What is your object in saying that ?—My object is that if we get separation we shall be able to work.

207. The Chairman : Now I want a short time with the other party representing the Separation League. We all appreciate the presence of U Hla Tun Pru, who is a member of the Legislative Assembly, as well as U Ba Thein, the Secretary. Now, would you like to address us on any particular point ?—(U Hla Tun Pru) This League was formed on the 3rd of September, 1928, with a view to collect and elicit opinion on the question of separation and also on the form of a draft constitution for Burma. And in order to make the decisions of this body as representative as possible of the different sections of the community and of different Associations in Burma, we invited different public bodies such as the Burma Provincial Congress Committee, U Chit Hlaing's G.C.B.A., the People's Party, the National Parliamentary Organization, the Home Rule Party, the Hundred Committee, the Anglo-Indian and Domiciled European Association, the British Burman Association, U Soe Thein's G.C.B.A., the Mandalay Baho Organization, the Burma for Burmans League, the Constitutional Club, the Karen National Association, and the Wunthanu Central Organization of Mandalay.

208. The Chairman : That shows the general authority of the body. We have this document and have had the opportunity of studying it. I dare say you would like to call attention to one or two things in it, would you ? On page 408, for example, you say : "The basic ideas on which the draft constitution "rests are · (1) separation of Burma from India and "(2) Dominion status for Burma," etc. Do I understand that some public meetings have been held to support the principles of the League ?—Yes, public meetings have been held in Rangoon and in different parts of Burma in order to express concurrence with the ideas, aims and objects which are set forth by the Separation League.

209. And I gather that this scheme of a constitution, the like of which I think Mr. G. H. Munro is partly responsible for, has the approval of the League ?—It has been approved by the League.

210. Are the reasons which have been given already and, of course, we have heard a good deal of these, the principal reasons which you would wish yourself to urge ?—I may say that I am in substantial agreement with a good many things which my friend, U Mya U, has urged before you. I think, sir, Burma can easily be a self-contained unit. It is geographically a self-contained unit. On the eastern side we have mountain barriers, and also on the northern and western sides ; and on the south we have only the broad seas, so that so far as the military question is concerned, I think we are practically an immune State. We have been immune from foreign invasions for thousands of years. In the days of our own kings, barring one or two Chinese expeditions, it cannot be said that Burma was ever conquered by any foreign nation. As a matter of fact, in the early 17th century, the Burmese, or rather the Arankanese, were masters of the sea in the whole of the Bay of Bengal, and if one refers to the historical records it will be found that the Moghul fleets were not a match for the Arakanese fleets. Also we were able entirely to annihilate the formidable Portuguese fleet in the naval actions of those days. We had been a first-class seafaring people so far as history shows. So far as soldiering is concerned we have proved our worth in the Great War, and I understand from several military officers that the Burmese made first class soldiers in Mesopotamia. I have asked opinions of people like Colonel Crawford, M.L.A., Mr. J. A. Steward, M.L.A., and several other military officers, and they all testify to the excellent military qualities of a Burmese soldier. Therefore, so far as the making of an army and navy are concerned, history is in our favour, and we shall, no doubt, under the skilled guidance of the British officers be able to raise our army and navy. Then with regard to the north-eastern frontier, I understand the Chinese will never be able to raise more than twenty thousand soldiers at a time, and for them to force that impassable pass will be extraordinarily difficult. As a matter of fact, to defend ourselves there, about six battalions will do. This opinion I gathered from a high military officer (General Kirke) when I was last in Simla. So far as the question of separation from India is concerned, it is high time that we should be allowed to devote our resources to self-development. We have been so far hampered by India. We had to pay a very enormous debt, the so-called war debt, for quite a number of years to the Indian treasury.

211. I am sorry I did not follow your remarks about the war debt. Did you say that Burma paid the war debt to India for a number of years ?—I do not see that any war debt should have been paid to India at all if Burma had become part of the Indian Empire. When the Punjab was conquered I do not think the Punjab paid any war debt, and why should Burma be singled out ? We have already paid enormous sums for a number of years. There was a reference the other day to this topic, whether Burma should again be saddled with the war debt to India. During all the one century, sir, Indians had the advantage of coming and working here, trading here and getting into the services, professions, and so forth. So we have more than paid up, I think, our war debt in different forms to the Indian people.

213. Dr. Surhawardy : Under your new constitution what position do you propose to assign to the Mussulmans ?—You mean the Burmese Mussulmans ? They will get absolutely the same status as the indigenous tribes.

214. Are you prepared to give them separate representation as the Karens enjoy ?—So far as we are concerned we shall oppose communal representation with all our strength. Burma has been extraordinarily broadminded in these matters. In Moulmein, for instance, we have had three non-Burmans as presidents of the municipality. In Bassein again, an Indian was president.

215. I am asking about the Mussulmans ?—In Shwegyin we had a Mussulman as the president and also at Mergui a Mussulman was the president.

216. Of course, I see Burma Mussulmans here. There are two of them on the Provincial Committee, of which the chairman is a Burma Mussulman, but the causes for their return might be different. I simply wanted to know what is the attitude of your League towards the Mussulman community ?—The attitude towards the Mussulman community is the general attitude towards all the people who live in Burma and try to accept citizenship in a fair way. We shall make no racial discrimination. Play the game, and you are Burmans. We only ask you to play the game, and not to play into the hands of a foreign bureaucracy. This communalism, as I find it from my experience in India, is playing the devil with the constitution there, if I may be pardoned the expression.

217. Is that the reason why you want separation, because you do not want to suffer from the virus of communalism ?—It is one good reason.

218. U Ba U : You have drawn up a constitution. Was it the constitution drawn up first by the sub-committee of your League ?—Yes.

219. And on that sub-committee one member was the first Education Minister, and another member was the leader of the Opposition in the council, and another was a member of the second Burma deputation to England ? They agreed upon a scheme and submitted a report to your general body ?—Yes.

220. And up to this date, I believe, you have received about fourteen letters or telegrams from various parts of the country supporting your scheme and demand for separation ?—Yes.

221. Mr. Rafi : You would be willing to have a safeguard, a provision, inserted in the constitution, whatever constitution it may be that you may get, safeguarding against discriminating legislation ? You would be prepared to have a provision safeguarding the interests of minorities ?—Once you bring in the question of minorities you bring in the question of communalism. I have said, play the game, and you will be all considered as Burmans.

222. U Ba U : U Mya U, you have great personal contact with the people in Upper Burma, is it so ?—(U Mya U) Yes.

223. During your tours to different parts of Upper Burma, do you observe that many Burmese agricultural labourers are without work ?—Yes.

224. Do you think the reason is that they can no more come down to Lower Burma for agricultural labour because Indians are displacing them as agricultural labourers ?—It is quite so. It is very difficult for them to compete on the same wages.

225. Do you remember that there was a large labour strike in Yenangyaung oil fields ?—Yes.

226. And that three Burmese labour leaders were externed from the oil field area for the strike ?—Yes.

227. And do you remember that the Burmese strikers could not get back their work and more wages because a new batch of Indian labourers had already replaced them ?—Yes, that is quite true.

228. Mr. Campagnac : One word of personal explanation, sir. Although I was present at the separation meeting and I expressed myself in favour of separation, I did not agree to that constitution.

The Chairman : Quite right.

Memorandum submitted by the Karen Elders of Burma.

INTRODUCTORY REMARKS.

Historically, in the year 1837, when it was found desirable for a British Commission to explore certain portions of this Province with a view to opening trade, &c., it is recorded that a right royal welcome was extended to the said Commission by the Karens. Dr. D. Richardson who conducted such a Mission wrote that he was " treated throughout in the most civil and friendly manner by the Karens who provided him with food and guide ; they also promised every facility and assistance to the traders who might pass to and from Moulmein through their country."(*)

History in a different form repeated itself in 1921 when although the atmosphere of Burma at that particular period was surcharged with determined cries of boycott and threats of violence, the Whyte Committee received cordial co-operation from the Karens of Burma. In point of fact, the recognized Leader of the Karen Community, Dr. San C. Po, C.B.E., M.D., eminent in loyal service to the British Raj and distinguished for his loyalty to his own race, being solicitous of Burma's highest welfare and prompted solely by that high motive, served as a member on that historic Committee presided over by that brilliant statesman, the Honourable Mr. (since then Sir Frederick) Whyte.

History is repeating itself for the third time next year and we may here and now give the Right Honourable Sir John Simon and the Members of his Commission the fullest assurance that they may with confidence count on Karen co-operation when they visit the hospitable shores of Burma in the discharge of their high Imperial duty.

Burma thrilled with pleasant anticipations born of the announcement made by the Associated Press dated Calcutta, 20th February, that Lord Burnham parenthetically declared that the Simon Commission would also visit Burma in the course of its official tours. Ultimately, however, our hopes were chilled by neglect and doomed to disappointment and it was even feared that after all if public-spirited men in Burma desired to state their case and lay their views before the Indian Statutory Commission in connexion with the working, &c., of the Reforms in Burma, they might have to cross the Bay of Bengal again to do so as on the occasion of the late the Right Honourable E. S. Montagu's visit to India on that momentous Mission in 1917.

In an atmosphere of doubt and uncertainty the wiser course seemed to us to be to " wait and see," holding ourselves in readiness to co-operate with the Simon Commission by giving viva voce evidence before it, should our evidence be required. Towards the end of last month some of us received from the Chief Secretary to the Government of Burma, with his compliments, an invitation to submit Memoranda or Written Statements to the Indian Statutory Commission. It was only then we felt sure that any labours undertaken by us with the sole purpose of co-operating with the Indian Statutory Commission would obtain attention and, perhaps, merit some appreciation.

GENERAL OBSERVATIONS.

1 (a) The Basis of Franchise.—The franchise, as we have it in Burma, is consistently broad-based and entirely satisfactory.

(b) Methods of Election.—Elections qua elections have been properly conducted. However, in the matter of electoral rolls and polling stations there should be a more careful preparation of the former, especially in the districts, and with regard to the latter once they are publicly notified the notification should for obvious reasons be final.

(c) Methods whereby particular interests, communal, social and economic, may obtain adequate representation on local self-governing, provincial and central representative bodies.—So far as the Karens of Burma are concerned, the Whyte Committee recommended the reservation of five communal electorates to safeguard the interests of the Karens. But for this provision it is no exaggeration to say that Karens would have utterly failed to obtain representation in the Burma Legislative Council. Similarly, on local self-governing bodies such as Municipalities, Circle Boards, District Councils, &c., unless some such provision is made it is impossible for Karens to obtain representation, much less adequate representation. It is nothing less than deplorable that whereas ample provision is made for the representation of numerous non-indigenous races in Burma on local self-governing bodies, there is no provision made for the Karens who are regarded as an important community to secure representation on these bodies except in only one or two Municipalities. In this respect, therefore, ample provision should be made to enable Karens to educate themselves and gain experience in the art of self-government.

(d) The Relationship between representatives and constituents. (e) The Growth of Parties. (f) The Growth of informed Public Opinion.—One answer may be given to these three heads in the Simon Commission questionnaire. The tone and colour of the answer to these questions will be governed more or less by the mentality or temperament of the person or body of persons giving the answer. The Montagu-Chelmsford Reforms were introduced into India in 1919 and when extended to Burma they came into force here at the beginning of 1923. We are of the decided opinion that on the whole since the working of the Reforms in Burma national consciousness has been awakened as it has never been before and as a means of education the Reforms have surely been a great educating factor. The beginnings, touching the aspects of growth on the lines indicated by these topics, are not big and perfect, but the beginnings are there and with time and opportunity they will improve and develop towards the legitimate goal.

(g) Nomination of officials and non-officials as additional members of elected bodies.—This device has on the whole worked satisfactorily.

3. The local and self-governing bodies and their relationship with the Provincial Government—By the terms of the announcement of August 20, 1917, the development of self-governing institutions with a view to the progressive realisation of responsible government was to be " gradual." With reference to the question under discussion we feel very strongly that official control from the local self-governing bodies was removed too early and too much. Some responsible officer of ripe experience at the helm of these affairs, training and directing the people of the country to rise to a just sense of their responsibilities would have resulted in less serious mistakes and ensured efficient management.

SUGGESTIONS FOR THE FUTURE.

1. Entire Separation of Burma from India.—Note (c) of the Appendix to the communique issued by the Secretaries of the Indian Statutory Commission invites suggestions for the future. And we now propose to deal with this aspect of the situation.

Burma should be separated from India for reasons geographical, political and economic. Burma, as a Province, forms no part of India. There are indisputable differences in customs, race, religion, language and interests. There can be no question that Burma will grow and develop on gradual and sound lines once she is separated from India.

† " Burma is not India. Its people belong to another race in another stage of political development, and its problems are altogether different. For instance, the application to Burma of the general principles of throwing open the public service more widely to Indians would only mean the replacement of one alien bureaucracy by another."

In order to facilitate Separation and to make the transaction fair and equitable to both parties we would humbly request the Indian Statutory Commission to recommend to Parliament that Burma be furnished with accounts showing the amount expended by India on Burma and the amount India has been repaid by Burma during all these past years.

There was a time when the highest Court in Burma was subordinated to the High Court of Judicature at Fort William. In course of time it was felt that we could very well stand on our own legs in this direction and we are so standing now.

Likewise in the matter of Education, our High Schools and Colleges were for a long time affiliated to the University of Calcutta. When, in this matter also, Burma desired to have and work out her own plans for her rising sons and daughters numerous objections (which we need not repeat here) were set up against our becoming a detached entity educationally. The wisdom of our entire separation from the Calcutta University is more than amply justified by numerous incontrovertible facts. Thanks to the parental interest, broad vision and consuming zeal of His Excellency Sir Harcourt Butler, G.C.S.I., G.C.I.E., I.C.S., the first Governor of Burma, our University of Rangoon has won our deepest gratitude and claims the unbounded admiration of her sister universities. In this connection, we quote with pardonable pride an extract from The Anglo-Indian Review dated Calcutta, March, 1928, which wrote spontaneously as follows :—

"A great disadvantage under which the Anglo-Indian and Domiciled European Community suffers in India is the absence of a Residential University where the students have the advantage of living a corporate life as in the Western Universities. In fact, it is this disadvantage which deters many of our brilliant young men from going to a University. We have, therefore, much pleasure in bringing to the notice of parents and young men the splendid advantages offered by the University College at Rangoon. The new University buildings are rapidly nearing completion and will be ready for occupation from June this year. The University stands on an estate of 485 acres and is actually a miniature town. It will be one of the finest Universities in the East having every accessory of a modern University and being equipped with its own lighting arrangements, water and sewage equipment, roads, parks, playing fields, rowing and swimming clubs, gymnasium, theatre and a club house."

In the days when we asked for a University of our own, when we demanded the right of shaping and forming our educational policy in accordance with the aspirations and needs of our people and our Province, there were not a few who strongly objected to the severance of our long-established connection with the University of Calcutta, giving all sorts and kinds of imaginary draw-backs and hypothetical disadvantages attendant on the demanded severance. Facts speak louder than words and we are content to leave the facts as they are seen to-day.

Now, as we ask the Simon Commission to recommend to the British Parliament inter alia the separation of Burma from India we foresee that quite a number of people will raise their voices against our conception of the future welfare of Burma. We anticipate that the loudest cry will come from India herself. This would be quite natural as no one desires to kill the goose that lays the golden eggs. Continuing the metaphor, we may add that Burma has laid golden eggs for the benefit of India, but India has neglected Burma, has not considered our interests in the spirit of fair play and all this despite the fact that she has been exacting from us a very large portion of our revenues.

Over and above the considerations we have already advanced, there is another and more weighty reason and we beg to stress very particularly this particular aspect of our case. In our considered opinion the separation of Burma from India and that alone will make it possible for the different indigenous races of Burma—the Burmese, Karens, Kachins, Chins and Shans—to be usefully welded into one solid Nation. Unless opportunities are open to the indigenous races of Burma to regard Burma nationally—and Burma as a separate entity under the British Crown is the only way!—Burma can never progress nationally. As long as Burma is kept dangling on India's dhoti so long will there be no cohesion among the indigenous races of Burma.

We are firm in the belief that just as Burma has wonderfully progressed in the two definite directions we have indicated above—first, in the matter of our Law Courts and then in the line of our educational institutions—since we stood out independent of India, equally wonderfully or still more so shall our fair country progress when as a separate entity, under the fostering care of the British Government, her indigenous races welded into one nation will think not merely in terms of isolated racial pride but in the larger national consciousness of "Burman" citizens and will accordingly work heart and soul towards a common nationhood and a natural ideal.

II. Communal Representation.—We have already dealt with this important question on general lines This subject was discussed fairly fully in 1921 by one of the signatories to this Memorandum. Vide "Memorandum of Evidence submitted to the Whyte Committee . . . by Sydney Loo-Nee, Barrister-at-Law," appended to this Memorandum as Appendix A.

The Whyte Committee after very carefully studying the whole question granted to the Karens of Burma, as we have already acknowledged, five communal electorates to safeguard the interests of the Karens. We respectfully submit to the Simon Commission that the Karen representation in the Burma Legislative Council will be adequate and complete if the Members of the said Commission unanimously recommend the creation of additional Karen Electorates, one each for the City of Rangoon and the following Districts : Insein, Hanthawaddy, Tharrawaddy, Henzada, Tavoy, Toungoo, Pegu, Salween Mergui and Pyapon.

We beg to state that many, many years before the Members of the Indian Statutory Commission were born the Karens were "most civil and friendly" (*) to the British Government and the British Government in its turn were most solicitous about the welfare of the Karens who were even prior to 1835 "English subjects." (†)

We, therefore, earnestly pray that if the British Government of to-day regards that it still has obligations to the Karens of Burma, statutory provisions may be made to safeguard our interests and increase, even accelerating, our progress and prosperity politically, socially and economically.

III. Karenization.—Finally, we submit that provision may be made for the adequate representation of Karens in the various public services.

APPENDIX A. MEMORANDUM OF EVIDENCE SUBMITTED TO THE WHYTE COMMITTEE BY SYDNEY LOO-NEE, BARRISTER-AT-LAW, SENIOR VICE-PRESIDENT THE NATIONAL KAREN ASSOCIATION, BURMA.

To

THE HONOURABLE MR. A. F. WHYTE,
Chairman,

The Burma Committee on the Franchise and Division of Subjects.

Rangoon, the 5th day of November, 1921.

Sir,

This is your first visit to Burma. We hope it will not be the last. We wish to offer you a very cordial welcome to Burma and her peoples.

. . . . . .

In conjunction with some others I have been honoured with an official invitation to give evidence before your Committee now sitting in Rangoon.

INTRODUCTION.

Being one of the Karen witnesses invited to give evidence before your Committee, you will perhaps wish me to say something about the activities of the Karens with special reference to the Constitutional changes to be born of the historic announcement in the House of Commons on the 20th August, 1917. Hence, before discussing the matters now engaging the attention of your Committee, I propose, with your permission, to lay before your Committee a resumé of the necessitated action taken by the Karens to safeguard their national existence.

RESUMÉ OF KAREN REPRESENTATIONS.

When His Majesty's Secretary of State for India visited India in 1917 the Karens of Burma delegated the Honourable Dr. San Crombie Po, M.D., and your witness to represent and voice the sentiments, wishes and aspirations of the Karens of Burma. We were privileged to wait upon the Secretary of State and the Viceroy on the 6th day of December, 1917.

On that memorable occasion we had the pleasure of the company of two sections of our Burmese fellow-countrymen, the Elder Party, representing the Burmese Community of Burma in general and the Burmese Merchants' Association and Co-operative Societies of Burma in particular and the Younger Party, representing the Y.M.B.A.'s of Burma.

In 1918, the Honourable Dr. San Crombie Po, M.D., Saw Po Min and your witness were privileged to wait upon the present Head of the Burma Government at Maymyo and His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of Burma was graciously pleased to give us an assurance that Karen interests would be safeguarded.

In 1919 in response to the invitation of the Local Government freely inviting criticisms and suggestions anent its proposals commonly called the "Craddock Scheme," the National Karen Association, Burma, on behalf of the Karens of Burma, duly submitted through the appointed channel its criticisms and suggestions on the framework of the Constitution recommended by the Local Government, for the solution of the problem of Burma's political evolution.

Not desirous of either wasting the time or wearying the attention of your Committee, I do not propose to read out the said document. It suffices to note that you will find it in extenso on page 93 of the Joint Select Committee on the Government of India Bill.

To pass on. In this very year, feeling very strongly that the Karens' legitimate aspirations had not been sympathetically appreciated by Sir Reginald Craddock's Government, the National Karen Association, Burma, considered it expedient to despatch a Karen Deputation to England for the purpose of appealing to the wisdom and justice of British Statesmanship. And here again, perhaps, I may, for the sake of brevity, be permitted to refer your Committee to the Joint Select Committee on the Government of India Bill, Volume III, Appendix N., pp. 81 and 82.

As I leave this portion of my evidence I desire, if I may, to place on record here my humble tribute to the Right Honourable the Earl of Selborne, who presided over the deliberations of the Joint Select Committee with natural grace, characteristic courtesy and sympathetic interest, for the noble Earl and his Committee's cordial reception of the deputations from Burma.

I propose now to take up the terms of reference seriatim.

I.—FRANCHISE.

I believe the opinion is unanimous that the franchise should be broad and the electorates devised in such a manner so that all classes of taxpayers may secure their representatives by election.

While, therefore, on the one hand, the usual qualifications, ex-gr.. age, state of mind, etc., are to be insisted upon, on the other hand, in rural areas, those who pay Capitation tax and Thathameda, and, in urban areas, those paying Municipal rates and taxes or assessed to income-tax should have the franchise equally with those who, for valid reasons, are especially exempted from those taxes.

II.—DIRECT ELECTION.

Consistently with the avowed object of making or beginning to make Responsible Government an assured fact in India and Burma, election should ipso facto be direct.

With reference, however, to the Ministers of the Executive Council they may be elected by the Governor from the elected members of the Legislative Council.

III.—(a) TERRITORIAL ELECTORATES.

Burma, for administrative purposes, is divided into 8 Divisions. The Karens are mostly to be found in the Divisions of Pegu, Irrawaddy and Tennasserim as well as Rangoon, Syriam and Insein.

With due respect, I would urge for the creation, present and immediate, with an assurance that an irreducible minimum of representation will be fixed, of special Karen Electorates in the three divisions above-named, each electorate returning two representatives and the Rangoon, Syriam and Insein Electorates returning one representative to represent the Karen interest in the Provincial Legislature.

The answer to the hypothetical query: What about the Karens in the other Divisions? is that the Karen clannishness bids fair to save the whole race.

In support of this view I wish to invite the attention of your Honour's Committee to the Karens' dutiful and loyal address of welcome to Lord Chelmsford on the occasion of His Excellency's official visit to Burma. The address is dated Rangoon, December 1st, 1916, and paragraph 3 thereof reads as follows:—

"3 . . . We rejoicingly appreciate the fact that the present illustrious Head of the Government of of Burma (Sir Harcourt Butler), whose ingenious conceptions, not merely in the matter of Local advancement but also in the direction of Imperial interests, have struck the warm imagination of the aspiring peoples of this province, has been graciously pleased to invite a Karen—we allude to the Honourable Dr. San Crombie Po, M.D.,—to the deliberations of the Burma Legislative Council. Never in the annals of our race has such an enviable honour been conferred on one of our race, and this considerateness, not to say recognition of our ancestors' loyal devotion to the British in this country under all circumstances touches, we beg to assure your Excellency, a very tender chord of our heart which still beats high with loyalty to the British Raj."

Here, sir, is a Karen from the Irrawaddy Division whose elevation to the Burma Legislative Council is hailed with acclamation by his fellow Karens all over Burma. Not a breath of jealousy is heard, not half a syllable of aspersion is uttered by his own people. On the contrary, there is the documentary fact I have just cited to your Committee. Ipsa res loquitur.

But, my objector pulls me up, Dr. San C. Po was selected to represent the Irrawaddy Division as a whole—not you Karens specially.

My unhesitating answer is:—A fortiori, if Dr. San C. Po was a real representative of his own people, our joy would know no bounds—the binding bond between him and his people would be more real, the interests would be identical.

Further, should a benign Government feel persuaded that the Karen interests are not adequately represented in the manner hereinbefore indicated, an additional number may be nominated to fill up the gap.

III.—(b) MINORITIES AND BACKWARD CLASSES.

(i) Communal Electorates.—As your Honour is a stranger within our gates I would like to entertain you, sir, for ten minutes or so with an account of the Karens of Burma.

I frankly confess at the outset that what will follow in a moment is a wholesale quotation. I cheerfully acknowledge my great indebtedness for the following to Mr. C. Morgan Webb, whose knowledge of the Karens is at once profound and unique.

About 10 years ago Mr. C. Morgan Webb wrote as follows :—

"Tribes of the Sinitic Group.—The total figures for the tribes of the Karen or Sinitic racial group are for the first time complete in the records of the current census. Hitherto, the exclusion of the Karenni Sub-division of the Southern Shan States from the possibility of racial classification has rendered the figures but a partial presentation of the numbers of the Karen race. The total of 1,102,695 persons can be assumed to be as accurate as the conditions of census enumeration in Burma will allow. The whole, with the exception of the small number of 5,717 members of the Brè tribe who were the subject of an estimate, have been directly enumerated. The increase for the decade is 199,334, but of this amount, 63,628 is due to the inclusion of the records for Karenni sub-division. Without the extra area, the increase would have been 135,700, or approximately 15 per cent., a rate of increase which coincides closely with that for the population of Burma proper.

The Karens, of all the races to be found in the province, have intermingled least of all with the members of other races. It has already been recounted in this chapter how quietly and unobtrusively the progenitors of the Karens migrated from their original home in Western China to their headquarters in the Karenni Sub-division of the Southern Shan States. It has also been related in Chapter VII how the phenomenon of endogamy is to be found among the Karen tribes to a degree not known among any of the remaining races of the province. As a result of this ethnical isolation the Karens stand out as a highly individualised racial group. Linguistically, the Karens belong to the Siamese-Chinese sub-family, but the connection between the Shan and the Karen languages is so remote that the cleavage between the two races must have taken place in pre-migration times. There is nothing in the literature or legends or customs of either race to suggest any ethnical connection between them. A striking contrast exists between the mass of information available concerning the Karens as they exist at the present time and the paucity of anything approaching certainty as to their history. They have left no impression whatever on the history of other races which would serve to check or substantiate their rather nebulous legends as to their origin. In the midst of communities who have readily amalgamated with whatever tribes and races happened to be in their immediate vicinity, the Karens alone have remained isolated and self-contained. The ready reception they have accorded to the teachings of Christianity has tended to strengthen their individuality as a racial group, and to widen the differences existing between them and the remaining indigenous races of the province. While the Talaings, at one time supreme over the whole of the deltaic portion of Burma, are being absorbed by the Burmese, there is no suggestion that any such absorption, or even that any amalgamation between the Burmese and the Karen races is within the range of possibility. So far as past history and present tendencies indicate, the Karens, however much they may suppress and abolish their internal tribal divisions, will remain a distinct and progressive group."

"CENSUS OF INDIA, 1911 : VOLUME IX : BURMA : PART I.—REPORT : pp. 275–276."

Let this extract serve as an introduction to the topic near and dear to the Karen heart, to wit—Communal Representation.

Communal Representation has incessantly and consistently been the main platform of the Karens right from the beginning.

While it is a source of unabated gratification to the Karens that the Burmese Elders in their Scheme (paragraph 4), formulated some years ago in connexion with the Montagu-Chelmsford Reforms with especial reference to Burma, fully recognised the Karens' claim to communal representation, it is deeply deplorable that Sir Reginald Craddock has signally failed to see in this vital and far-reaching matter eye to eye with the Karens.

Communal representation was inaugurated in India by the Morley-Minto Reforms in 1909, fulfilling Lord Minto's promise made in 1906. In 1919, the Montagu-Chelmsford Reforms honoured the pledge. The Joint Parliamentary Committee accepted it, embodying it in the statutory rules under the Government of India Act. In 1921, the Earl of Reading regards it as a sacred trust.

Sir, I submit to your Committee with all respect that the argument of the Local Government that special representation with separate electorates for the Karens of Burma will stereotype an unnecessary division is idle.

And, with regard to the fear that special representation of the Karens will encourage them to settle down into a feeling of satisfied security, I submit with due deference that, on the contrary, the boon, especially if embodied in the statutory rules under the Government of India Act, will be a great impetus for the Karens to justify their national existence.

I sincerely believe that the grant of communal representation to the Karens will mark an epoch in the evolution of Burma which bids fair to produce healthy results.

Burmese Leaders and Karen Leaders will learn to respect one another and Burmans with their fellow-countrymen, the Karens, will find it easier to work together for the common cause with a large measure of solidarity.

I need not recapitulate paragraph 6 of the Karen Memorial submitted through His Majesty's Secretary of State for India to the Joint Select Committee on the 16th day of August, 1919, in the House of Lords. I only ask that this portion of my evidence be read together with it.

I belong to the non-vociferous section in Burma. Our policy is to strive by constitutional methods to vocalise our rights and privileges, our sentiments and wishes, our needs and aspirations.

Surely, sir, a people that came "forward loyally during the late Great War and . . . furnished more men in proportion to their numbers than" the other indigenous races of Burma "for the Burma Regiments lately raised," must avowedly deserve some concrete recognition.

In concluding another portion of my evidence before your Committee, I submit that the granting of communal representation to our community will be making the assured bond of loyalty, which binds our race to the British Raj, stronger and doubly sure.

III.—(b)—(ii), (iii) & (iv)—SPECIAL CLASSES IN PLURAL CONSTITUENCIES, NOMINATION AND PROPORTIONAL REPRESENTATION.

Having said so much on the preceding topic, I prefer to pass over these particular phases in silence.

The time which a considered discussion of the above topics would assuredly consume had better be devoted to the Cause of

EDUCATION.

Humanly speaking, Karens are what they are educationally—I would not dwell on the spiritual aspect of the Karens' progress; because I have no desire to usurp the sphere of our Karen divines. And, further, it were foreign to and wholly outside the scope of the deliberations of your Committee—yes, sir, we are what we are to-day, thanks to the British boon of education which has been tenderly nursed and lovingly nurtured by the selfless effort and consuming zeal of our Christian Missionaries who have come to us from England and America, Italy and France. And, wherever educational facilities have been offered to the Karens, they have been availed of with increasing avidity.

Shortly after my return from England—and that is a matter of months only—I was credibly informed that at the opening of the last school session our Karen High School in Rangoon, established in 1852 by the first Vintons whom, with their famous son the Rev. Dr. J. B. Vinton, the Karens will ever remember with an affection almost adoring, had actually to turn away numbers of would-be pupils, both boys and girls—(Karens have believed and still believe in co-education !) owing to the schoolroom and housing problem.

The facts being what they actually are we would register a prayer here that " in all extensions of educational facilities adequate provision is made for the special needs of the Karens."

IV AND V.—NUMBER OF NOMINATED OFFICIAL MEMBERS AND SIZE AND COMPOSITION OF THE COUNCIL.

With reference to the number of nominated official members and the size and composition of the provincial Legislative Council I have nothing to add to the recommendations of the Local Government, save that, in my opinion, the strength (not considering for a while the composition) of the Council should be increased commensurate with the importance and progressive character of the Province.

VI.—WOMEN'S SUFFRAGE.

In view of the triple fact that the women of Burma are comparatively highly literate, are getting educated in greater numbers, and are untrammelled by any system of caste, coupled with the additional fact that they already enjoy the Municipal Franchise, their enfranchisement, at the very dawn of Burma's new era, must warm the imagination of every lover of progress.

The Local Government is, therefore, to be warmly congratulated upon its unequivocal recommendation to confer the vote on the women of Burma.

VII.—DIVISION OF FUNCTIONS.

With regard to the transferred subjects the Local Government's proposal of adopting in toto Schedule II to the Devolution Rules which is practically the list of the Feetham Committee is seconded with one qualification, if possible.

To obviate acute situations Karen Education should be included among European and Anglo-Indian Education. Having concluded my evidence I wish to thank you, sir, and along with you the members of your Committee for a hearing which is both patient and kind.

*Memorandum by the Karen National Association, Burma, to which are affiliated Branches of the Karen National Association from Bassein, Myaungmya, Henzada, Maubin, Tharrawaddy and Prome, Rangoon, Thaton, Toungoo and Papun.

We, the Karens in Burma, hope to be understood that our observations will have reference to Burma in particular. We were invited to submit our views on this very big subject at the last moment. Besides, we were not prepared to offer anything in the big tug-of-war, in which we know our position is absolutely unqualified to allow us making any gestures. We would, therefore, ask the indulgence of the Commission to take only the senses of the terms, employed for the sake of terseness and expressiveness, and not to pay much attention to the forms thereof.

1. THE REPRESENTATIVE SYSTEM AS APPLIED TO BRITISH INDIA.

(a) The basis of the Franchise. We have nothing to grumble about in this connection as far as the present is concerned. However, for the sake of fairness and equity, we would like to see the fair women of Burma have the same privilege, as a large number of them are supporters of their families.

(b) Methods of Election. Theories are, as a rule, fine, but the manner of working them out is seldom near to anything satisfactory. Our present method of election is no exception to the rule. Dishonesty, insincerity, lack of the sense of duty and lack of right earnestness are the main causes of failure in the responsible jobs. We would beg leave to invite a reference to the " Proceedings of the Karen National Union, 10th February, 1926," annexed hereto, marked, " Annexure I," submitted to the Local Government about April, 1926, particularly to Resolution 6, on page 11.

We would, however, make the following suggestions in addition :—

(1) Polling centres should be increased so that there may be one in every circle of three or four or five miles radius. There should be one polling station in an area of six or eight or ten miles square, or one station to every group of between 600 and 1,000 voters, making an allowance of one minute to a voter on the average. Personation, a well-known trick, could be well safeguarded, we believe, as voters within the small area know one another, as a rule, and agents could easily make use of his own voters as detectives.

(2) In towns and cities personations are made pleasurable tricks and subjects of amusement in the after-talks. Crowding and hurrying facilitate the games, and the remedy we see is (i) extending the polling time, or (ii) taking the constituency quarter by quarter, or if necessary block by block.

(3) Taking thumb impression would a long way help eliminating the " tricks."

At the close of each polling or each day's polling, boxes should be opened and tokens counted by the presiding officers in the presence of all the agents, and the leading villagers, if they choose to be present. The counting may be checked by the agents if necessary. The result of the counting should be drawn up in as many copies as there are agents plus one, all signed by the agents and the presiding officers, and sealed by the office seal. The boxes might then be sealed and returned to the Deputy Commissioner for checking. Each agent will have one copy, the presiding officer retaining one for himself.

(c) Methods whereby particular interests, communal, local, social, and economic, may obtain adequate representation on local self-governing, provincial and central representatives and constituents. It is very difficult to make a hard and fast rule for these interests. Directly speaking, we are not in favour of giving commercial bodies and Universities any representatives. The one is a private affair or aggregated private affair for gain and, therefore, on principle has no claim for representatives; or else any private enterprise will claim for one—at least, it has the right to do so. In fact, they are part of the province or, more correctly, part of the people of the province and, therefore, have already been represented in the people, and we see no ground why they should be represented twice. If they are given such a unique privilege, other associations, unions, leagues and trusts that are being born fast, and yet to be born, will, in course of time, claim for the same privilege.

The Universities draw their funds from the Government, and Government draw theirs from the people. Another source of feeding is by donations, free or compulsory, as in the case of the Rangoon University —from the people again. For these reasons, Universities are the concerns of all, and have, therefore, been represented in the people. There is no necessity of their being represented again in the Legislature. But making allowance for the conservative nature in human beings, we would allow not more than two representatives for each of the above bodies. Whether it should have one or two depends on its size and importance; in other words, each case is to be decided according to its own merit.

Communal Interests. Communal representation is objectionable in the viewpoint of the Hindus and the Burmese, and this they say on principle; but in that of the Muhammadans and the Karens, it is an absolute necessity, and that on the score of practice.

In matters for local bodies, we strongly urge that Karens should have separate councils and boards where possible. For example, Karen villages are distinct by themselves by natural selection, so to say, hence they have got their schools separate. They have also got their own sub-inspectors and deputy inspectors of schools. We do not see why they should not have their own assistant inspectors and inspectors of schools and their school boards separate. The reason or reasons for urging the separation are as given in resolution 7, on page 13 of the "Proceedings of the Karen National Union, 10th February, 1926," hereto annexed, marked, "Annexure I."

This joining, or combination, is putting a bullock and a tiger under the same yoke, with a matter-of-course ploughman following behind. It is a simple thing for any simple brain to see that the combination profits neither the bullock nor the tiger nor the farmer. In fact, it hurts one, both, and all—and seriously, too. Let man give freedom to each separate aspiration in this matter; yea, let him prepare the way for it, and let Nature work the combination, if there should be any, in her far-seeing eye.

Social Interests. Properly speaking, there is no such a class of people as Depressed or Outcast in this "Beautiful Land of Pagodas" to merit special representation. However, we understand that certain classes of Christians are outcasted by their own blood-kins and find no welcome in any quarters. Hence, they are equally an outcast in the parliamentary social functions. With the big spirit of Charity for all, we would suggest one or two representatives for them, provided their number justifies such representation.

Communal Representation on Local Self-Governing and Provincial Bodies. We, the Karens, now are given five representatives for five of the sixteen districts in which Karens reside. The Karens in the five districts are, of course, represented; but the position of the Karens in the remaining eleven districts is anonymous. Hence our position as a whole is anomalous, being neither communal nor non-communal. As a rule, the five representatives identify themselves with their constituencies only, which are the five districts. We, therefore, urge that our case be absolutely communal, and that our representatives may be in number at least in the exact proportion of our population, and that in form they be elected as those by the Anglo-Indian community. That is to say, we should like to have our representatives elected by our whole community, residing in the sixteen districts in Burma. The privilege, if granted, would not only serve as a safeguard to the Karen interests against outside influences, but would also help reviving the Karen spirit and strengthening their associations, unless our rulers secretly wish us non esse.

Our position in the local self-governing bodies is most insecure and our interests are thereby affected adversely; for instance, the primary education of the Karens. In this connection we would like to state that in pre-Reform days the Karens, though backward they might have been in the eyes of others, had maintained their primary education in their villages with such organised form as to attain some measure of unique success, to the envy of their neighbours. But, alas! during these Reformed days and this transitory period, about twenty per cent. of their village schools are left to starve to death, receiving no more grants from the so-called Education Department. Such being our plight in local self-governing bodies, we strongly urge that provisions may be made whereby the Karens may have representatives in these local bodies in number, at least, in the exact proportion of their population in the various districts concerned, if our claim for separate Councils and Boards cannot be granted.

Central Representative Body. To be short and to the point, we are tired of being tied up to the tail of India for ever, nor do we like to see our land flooded with Indians and Chinese. Burma is Burma, and it has been so from time immemorial; and we have learnt painful lessons in being an apron-string to India. We eagerly look forward to the time when Burma will be separated from India. Really speaking, we see nothing good coming from having representatives in the Central Legislative body, except waste of money and time.

(d) Relationship between Representatives and Constituents. In one sense, Burma M.P.'s represent nobody. The general mass, or greater portion of the mass is sleeping unconcerned; a large part of the waking are down in the breeze with no real or definite object in view, or cheap profiteers easily bought and sold like hot cakes. The present working of election has not reached the mass.

We see no public spirit, but all self-spirit in the representatives. Take away the honour and the pay—we sincerely believe the Council House will be desolate. Most of the members know nothing of the people or the place they represent, much less their needs and difficulties. Many wear the cloak of public spirit for self-gain.

(e) Growth of Parties. These are growths of mushrooms on thin surface soil and among the thorns, nourished by the manure of self-interest or by that of the old lost love; more by the former judging by the number of detached groups.

(f) Growth of Informed Public Opinion. The channels through which public could express its opinions are Presses and Platforms, and these are found fairly in large number of late years, though not so large as it ought to be in order to effectively educate the public. In spite of the smallness of its number and the tenderness of its age, when it is about to increase and take on strength, it is met with a set-back through repressive measures stifling its growth. We are for Freedom of the Press and Freedom of Speech, allowing the public to express its opinions and, at the same time, giving the Government an opportunity to study different shades of opinions which find expressions in Presses and on Platforms. If Government would like to see itself as the public see it, then it should encourage the public to express its opinions freely and unreservedly.

Opinions may be informed, but they are generally speaking soiled and superficial. They lack the background, or backbone of solid virtues. We attach no importance to these growths as far as real and substantial progress is concerned. The country has long been under the Western tuition, particularly the British, and when the pupils make no improvement in a certain direction or get in bad ways, it is either that the teachers are themselves bad or incompetent, or that they are too thick to know that they are blowing on the glow-worm at night, without ever getting fire for the chilling, freezing home.

(g) Nomination of Officials and non-Officials as additional members of elected bodies. This sounds hope-refreshing to the minorities, but, in actual working, it is heart-breaking. For the choice only falls on the sure puppets and never on the doubtful plummets. The reasons are, perhaps :—

(1) True plummets are scarce to find in these days of endless learnings that are never able "to come to the knowledge of Truth," and

(2) Party interest is pre-eminently outweighing in Parliamentary games. There is no wonder in this, perhaps, for the "Education" of all Parliaments the world over is for party cliques, party interests, party victory, and so forth. In our view, the Governor should be the true Umpire unshackled with party cords. If Governors have been rich with true sincerity, true sympathy, true greatness of heart, true integrity, true justice, as the world-wide teaching of their gospels is, in other words, if they are rich with all the good qualities of "Big Souls," things would not have been as they are now, placed in such favourable position as they have been. But Governors are human as anybody else, and human beings must reap the harvest of their ways and of their sowings, good or bad, everywhere, and at all times.

2. THE SUITABILITY OF EXISTING AREAS FOR LEGISLATIVE AND ADMINISTRATIVE PURPOSES, AND FOR THE GROWTH OF REPRESENTATIVE INSTITUTIONS.

We attach no importance to "areas" that have no faults of their own. The faults are in the heart of the areas-makers, be they rulers or agitators. If the heart is right, many of the sores in defective areas would be cured without any external efforts; and these external efforts are often thin cloaks or means of evasion veiling the inward defects. Mere splitting and shuffling in the conflicting myriads of interests, real or feigned, will not make a permanent cure, if they make any at all. The disease is deep rooted, and these are but ointments rubbed on the surface. The disease is in the root. Why then make great fusses over the withering branches and the falling leaves at such expense in money, brain and energy? Are we only bees hovering around and about the branches and leaves making deep ominous hummings, only expecting to see flowers to suck? Are there no real farmers that would dig deep into the roots?

3. THE LOCAL SELF-GOVERNING BODIES.

(a) and (b). Constitution and functions are, properly speaking, one and the same. One directs, and the other performs. There may be little faults in these, and therefore they are not much to blame, as a rule. Rules and regulations can always be altered or modified to suit circumstance, all other things being well. Laws are fine or even holy sometimes, but it is the custodians or the handlers of laws that are rotten. This, we believe, is the main grievance of India and Burma, as it is the grievance of the world itself.

(c) Relationship with Officials of Provincial Government. We would suggest that local bodies have direct dealings with the Ministers or the Governor. Firstly, the Deputy Commissioner has his hands full, if he cares to do his work properly, and should not be given extra burdens. A man is in his fine form within a certain degree. If he is pushed above this, he becomes fiery or dizzy or crazy. The result is pretty serious, for not only the work suffers, but also the atmosphere. As for the Commissioner, there has been strong agitation to evict him, and we support it as we consider the office to be unnecessary growth of flesh on the body. Secondly, we have known enough of appeals which never profit or edify. One thing it can do, of course, that is to delay and stale matters or rot the meat.

(d) and (e). Control by Provincial Government and Finance. Control should be firmer and closer particularly in matters where money is concerned. As things are now, most Chairmen and Secretaries are sharp daring thieves, as all having eyes see or should see. There is nothing extraordinary in this. For they have been watching their elder brothers in the old offices skimming the cream with their mouths vigorously watering. Vide pages 18, 19 of Annexure I. We do not propose to go into details in these questions. Let us first purify the main spring, before we talk about the pipes, tubes, taps, and so on. But if those responsible for the purifying would confess their inability to do so, as could be interpreted from their attitude and behaviour, let them honestly say so and "resign."

4. THE PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT.

(a) The same remarks in 3 (a) above equally apply here. And if we were required to express our opinion explicitly, we would rather urge for "Full Responsible Government" or "Dominion Home Rule." Home Rule in India and Burma might be bloody rule, but blood often purifies rules; it at least simplifies them.

(b) Working of Dyarchy. We beg to invite a reference to Resolution 18 on page 10 of Annexure I, on this subject. In the old form of Government, which we would call Constitutional Despotism, we fared no better. Vide Annexure I, Annexure II and Annexure III.

(c), (d) and (e). Governor, Ministers and Executive Council. If Burma is separated from India and full Responsible Government or Dominion Home Rule is granted, the position and powers of the Governor will automatically change. However, during this transitory period, we would like the Governor to have vetoing powers, and not merely advisory. The Government of Burma would then form itself into a Cabinet with a Prime Minister taking the responsibilities. In this connection we would urge that the pays of these Cabinet Ministers be reduced as far as possible, say about Rs.1,000/-p.m., so as to mark out true patriotic sons, who are willing to sacrifice their petty interest for the welfare of their Mother Country.

(f) Growth of Party System. This, an unfortunate term, to us is a Western disease imported into the East. The West seldom allows diseases to go unchecked. But this it not only cherishes, but also nourishes. Party system kills the individuality as well as the originality, hence the vitality too. It then makes a man a blind follower and a false form. There is nothing good in or about it in our view. It may be said that no one is tied down to any party, but in many senses he is, and only open mercenaries are not.

Yes, it may be good food for the West, but surely it is not good for India and Burma. Unsteady, loose, cheap as the people are, it will make them more so. It again encourages hypocrisy and dishonesty. What would it look like, if our Houses are full with loose sand or with hypocrites?

But Government have been tutor in this, and the system has been formed. At present we see not one but three prominent systems, viz.: Racial System, Money System and Power System. There is no knowing as to how things would shape as we go along. In all probability, it will end in the elimination of the first and in the assimilation of the second to the third, and the Government would automatically become Aristocratic or Autocratic.

(g) Working of Particular Departments. As we have said, it does not trouble us much how each department works, so long as they and their children are honest. But if they are not honest, though they be placed on paths of gold, they will fall into chaos.

(h) Classification into Reserved and Transferred Subjects. The remarks in (g) above similarly apply here.

(i) Desirability of Second Chambers. The British Second Chamber is the greatest of farces, and perhaps the biggest folly of conservatism. There are nations which are run by one Chamber. Why then give ourselves the trouble and expenses of having two, with fructuous delays as the result ?

(j) Provincial Autonomy. We beg to invite reference to remarks in 1 (c) under Central Representative Body, and 4 (a) under the Provincial Government.

(k) and (h). Finances and Financial Control. The remarks in 4 (c), (d), (e), (g), (h) and (j) cover these two also.

5. THE CENTRAL GOVERNMENT, AND
6. RELATIONS BETWEEN CENTRAL GOVERNMENT AND THE PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT.

The questions in these do not arise if our views in 1 (c) and 4 (a) above are sustained.

7. THE COURTS AND THE JUDICIARY.

We would invite a reference to Resolution 10 on page 16 of Annexure I. We would also add here that a few months ago, the People's Party, in the Burma Council, moved that officers be made to swear on oath and drink the dreaded " Nyaungye " annually (the water of the flowers offered to the house gods), but the Government Party pooh-poohed the motion and knocked it out. We absolutely fail to understand this attitude of the Government Party, and could only draw the inference in the saying of the Burmese, " They are beans of the same baskets " or " Birds of the same feather." Surely, the father fox will not kill its foxling or wish to see them killed. So much about this at present. Further amplification will follow later at about the conclusion.

8. THE CONSTITUTIONAL PROBLEM IN RELATION TO SUCH VITAL MATTERS.

(a) and (b). Law and Order and Justice in British India.

Suffice it to say that Law and Order are farces, and Justice is mockery in India and Burma. Reference may be made here again to Annexure III and IV for better understanding. The observations in Annexure III do not profess to be exhaustive. They are only one-tenth of the floating iceberg above the surface. Forests, the Land Records, and the Police Departments are still worse. In fact and in short, Departments and Sub-Departments, with all their roots, branches and trunks, are rotten. Some one might ask for " the bright side." But the bright side is on the top, where offices and powers enjoy the glorious light of the biased Sun. We are in the bottom and with the bottom, and therefore cannot but see things in the darkness of the bottom, and if the bright side is still called for, let the glorious top give it.

(c) Defence of India. Though we Karens are regarded as a fighting race, on the whole we stand for Peace, International Peace and Universal Peace. In our opinion, the implements of War will do more harm than good both to the Aggressors and the Aggressed. Besides nowadays, defences and offences are in the air, and we are still footers that cannot fly. Let the fliers then discuss the question in which they qualify and not us.

(d) Social Progress. There is very little of it in Burma, and that little is more apparent than real. What progress can we expect of a people so light, so loose and so cheap like night-bazaar commodities ? By chances they form and by chances they disintegrate. There are again powerful destructive forces known in the common name of self-interests in which money and power play prominent.

(e) Federation in India. There will be enforced Federation as long as the British cannon booms and thunders. When the boomings subside, there will be bloody disintegration, we are sure, unless some unseen Agent works changes in the hearts of the people.

(f) The Status and Position of India, and

9. THE RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN THE CENTRAL GOVERNMENT, &C.

We presume that the remarks in (c), (d) and (e) in 4 above equally apply here. We would however pray that the best of spirits may enter the heart of the British, and with a large heart give to India whatever Status, Position, or Power, India may now aspire after.

10. THE POSITION OF THE SERVICES.

We do not believe in the names of Services appearing under this head. If all men are as broad as their words, there will be no necessity of classifying Services. It does not matter whether the Services are All-India, or All-England. But if the words are all lip and hypocritic or untrue, nothing will please the Hindus other than the All-Hindu Services. It is the same with the Mussulmans, the Burmese, and the Karens. We have no belief in I.C.S., or B.C.S. or P.C.S., or any other Services. We would at present propose to invite a reference to the statements made on page 2 of Annexure IV. Fuller discussion will be given in the Draft Scheme herein following, or in the concluding portion of this Memorandum.

Provincial Services and recruitment and of Public Services Commissions. We do not believe in examinations which make our light grains abhorably conceited, when they are successful. We want elderly men to be in offices and by election, removable at any time by " votes of censure." Public Services Commissions, and the kindred Commissions Boards and all are only fine expensive farces.

(e) Indianization. We see that Indianization must sooner or later come as a natural result. Likewise Burmanization will, but Burmanization without British specklings will make the Karen position intolerable, because although the British Officers may be Burmanised, as in fact they are, there may yet be a very small fraction who may retain some amount of fervour in them for the Karens. But if, on principle, Britainization should go, we would that the Karens' interests be safeguarded by a speckling of Karenization right through, by earmarking if necessary.

EDUCATION.

11. GROWTH OF EDUCATION.

" Education " in its present scope and form is making big leaps into laudable fields of self-aggrandisement at the expense of the great mass and of morality. From another point of view, it is more and more expensive and killing. There is no wonder in this, for what else could mere intellectual advancement lead to without a corresponding advancement in character, or in other words, in morality. Corruption in various forms, forms the aggregate of immorality, the degree of which may be gauged from the four Annexures read together.

True Education must be cheap and within the reach of all, but in fact is not so ; and it is the untrue Education of the present day that has clogged the True. The question is truly big and wide, but we will try to make it as short and concise as possible, circumstanced as we are now.

1. True Education, properly pursued, merges into religious, moral and spiritual Education, but false Education, in spite of all its glories which are but superficial and transient, is bound to lead into chaos.

2. True Education is not confined in the great Metropolis, nor in the bricks and walls as many believed, but in the fields and skies, in streams and files, in hills and valleys, and so forth, where everything is pure and refreshing to both the body and soul.

3. It is not in distant dignified lectures, but in simple, close and heart-to-heart talks. It is not in the imprisonment for several hours in a day within the walls of the school prison, but in the open field, farm, garden and so on. If there must be confinement in that prison, let it not be more than three hours in a day.

4. Breathing, physical exercise, out-door games and sport, manual works, drinking of good water are the best of medicine for the body, and therefore, form the most important part of Education.

5. In the imparting of Education, spiritual or moral Education (which some say are two distinct things, but we say are one and the same) must predominate, the intellectual and other may follow, for the spirit is the basis of all matters. If the spirit dies, the frame wrecks or perishes; but if the frame dies, the spirit blazes. Herein we see the world has long been guilty of a serious, yea, fatal blunder in dividing the soul and body, and in assigning two separate guardians for them.

FURTHER SUGGESTIONS IN DETAILS.

(a) We would strongly emphasise on practical Education, not the soaring theoretical one that detaches the brain and soul from the living foundation of morality, and enslave them within the narrow sphere of that low animal, self. Let the pupils be taught carpentry, smithery, dairy farming, agriculture and so on, and for girls cooking, weaving, spinning sewing and so on. In short, vocational training be given to the pupils according to their inclinations.

(b) Let Education be within the reach of all by making and teaching the pupils earn, pay their ways and save each year, so that at the end of their educational period they may be able to exhibit a substantial purse in the annual School Exhibition.

(c) Let moral Education predominate right through, and see that it not merely gives loose forms, but that it is instilled into the very nature of the pupils.

(d) Let not the pupils be confined within the walls for literary education more than three hours in a day, and let the other hours be for the practical noble studies enumerated in (a) above.

(e) Let there never be over-stinginess or stinginess about holidays and free days. Holidays keep the spirit of the children bright and buoyant, and it is far easier for instructors to push forward buoyant spirits than the sinking ones. Let the school days put together be not more than seven or eight months in a year divided into three or four terms.

(f) Let not a child go to school until he is about 10, and let not the Education period be more than 10 years. Of this period the Primary and Secondary Education will occupy six or seven years, and the remaining three or four will be for the College Education. Let all the pupils go through the whole training within the period.

(g) There should be only three real examinations, one Middle School Examination, one High School Examination and one College Examination. Mere strictness in forms in these examinations should be done away with. For fitness for a pass, the whole year's general work and worth should be taken into consideration. A pupil should not be kept in a class more than one year ordinarily, but in no case should he be kept there more than two years. Nothing should prevent a fit brain to jump over two or three classes in a year. Special talent in any direction should not be stunted and killed by its weakness in other directions, but should rather be encouraged in every way possible.

(h) The best teacher should have charge of the lowest class, and be given the highest pay. A teacher must be a teacher, not a mercenary, nor a man limping on one leg, nor a man going one-sided with only one eye in his tremulous head, nor a corrupted rot as we see everywhere to-day; and teachers' pay must be raised, and raised higher than any other kind of pay.

(i) Physical training and sports and games should not be forgotten. Real education is religion, or, to suit more ideas, its counterpart.

DRAFT CONSTITUTIONAL SCHEME.

As we have said on pages 10 and 11, in Resolution 10 of Annexure I, Mono-Archy or Dyarchy or Tri-Archy do not matter. It is the custodians of the Archis that do. The Central Power in the custodians is the heart. Vide also page 1 of Annexure II.

Human fancies vary, and hardly coincide. Any reasonable Constitution will do, in our view. Only the heart is to be corrected and placed in its right place and everything will slowly return to its normal condition.

This is the sum total of our Draft Scheme, and we feel that no further details are necessary.

APPENDIX. NOTE (C).

Many suggestions and observations have been given in the foregoings. A few more may be added here.

(a) "Hang the Useless Hounds." The multiplicity of works are the creation of our officers themselves; and who are responsible when they say they are too busy, that they cannot see you, or talk to you when you want to see them. In spite of all their breathless activities they achieve nothing, for aught we know. Crimes have been increasing by big leaps and bounds, according to the reports; but reports simply know a certain portion of things, never the whole; and so criminals, or the desire within them, it may be presumed. The hounds multiply, running about vigorously and a lot, and the foxes with their mischiefs keep on increasing in a greater proportion, and the cries of the suffering, miserable fowls and the worried farmers are ever so greater. Whatever could this strange affair mean? Does it not mean that the hounds are inefficient or useless? In our Karen way, if a dog fails to catch a surrounded wild cat several times, it is disposed of quick.

(b) "The foxes are immuned." This has been discussed at length, on pages 16 to 27 of Annexure I. There is no earnestness to dig them out of their holes. If you, by chance, happen to catch any one of them, it will turn heaven and earth to whitewash itself by means more foul than fair, and by making sacred offerings to the various shrines of its former devotion and, one thousand to one, it would be absolved and even exalted.

We would, therefore, suggest that the uncorruptible "Scotland Yard Police" be constituted in Burma, as soon as possible, to dig out the "foxes" and the "shrines," roots, branches and all, and for punishment we would suggest a readier and cheaper method of flogging in the "Forum," and by instalments where necessary.

(c) "Tremendous Bureaucrats." One great obstacle in the way of improvement in the present confusion is bureaucracy, with all its inherent sniffs, snaps, snubs and all. Its other great sins are pitch-blindness, conceitedness, pride, haughtiness, domineeringness, put together and crowned with "sinlessness." The greatest sin in the world is, we believe, sinlessness, for therein is hopelessness. Because, first, it is an ultimate stage; second, it has lost all enervating light—in other words, it is blind. It is absolutely useless talking about changes of forms and of this and that, so long this state of hopelessness exists. Is government or good government impossible without bureaucracy, or is it the last salvation in human Government? Let the heart pervade, and the whole hosts of the evil will flee; this is our deep belief.

(d) "Titles and Rewards." We do not believe in these. Men of real worth and virtues keep quiet, and care for little or no reward. Busy and false bodies alone are active for rewards. The results could be imagined when false and selfish forms are installed above quiet virtues.

(e) "Excise Department." This department should be abolished. The pros and cons of the matter may by gauged by referring the Annexure III. Give the hound a fresh leash, and it stops tugging. Human nature is like mischievous boys who are tempted to jump over where there is a bar. Remove the bar and the temptation goes. If the object is really to control, removing the bar is the simplest and the best remedy.

(f) "Capital Punishment." This also should be abolished. The reasons have already been frequently given by reviving leading opinions in many places.

(g) "Judicial and Executive Departments." There have been movements for separating the two. This, if accepted, would result in shiftable responsibility, endless friction, and in ineffectual administration. In fact, the result is manifest. We would rather narrow down the administrative areas to small townships, with an elected Head given full power over all the departments, guided and supported by a "Panchayat Committee" of four or five elected members. The Deputy Commissioner will be a supervisor over an area which may be equal to the present district, there should be no intermediate authority between, as it is now, and no intermediate authority between him and the ministers.

(h) "I.C.S., B.C.S., I.E.S., I.F.S., and other S's." Our examinations are for the privileged class only; sons of rich middle-officers, generally speaking. If public cries against corruption are true, then these officers have been sucking the blood of the people, or otherwise put: "the juice of the life of the backbone." Giving this privilege to this class, therefore, means favouring and encouraging corruption or the Demons. Again, precious gems and stones lie hidden deep underneath, while gravels and pebbles remain profuse on the top. Seekers of precious stones dig deep for gems and diamonds, but our Administrative stone-seekers have long been well-contented with scraping the surface. Is it, then, surprising that we have been landed on this present stage of universal confusion?

(i) "Public Spirit and Public Services." It is said a woman in China, by a piece of misfortune, honestly married two husbands of apparent equal virtues, each earnest in his claim for her. But when the wife was produced as a "corpse" before them, one sneaked out, and the other begged for the "remains" in order that he might pay the last tribute of love. Therein was true virtue revealed, and his wife was given him alive. Many claim to be of real public spirit and of real virtues just for the fatness of Rs5000/- a month. Reduce this to Rs1000/—as to reduce lower may be inadvisable—and we may have claimers of real virtues, when things may be expected to improve.

(j) "Independence deserves Independence, One Local Interest—Mutrawpu." Mutrawpu, now roughly the Papun district, was also known as the Land of the Five Chiefs, and it was once absolutely independent, and more independent than the Karenni States in the time of the Burmese Kings and at the times of the Annexation of Burma, and some time after. How it became part of British Burma deserves discussion, if the League of Nations is sincere. As far as we know it so became merely through a smooth friendship prompted by Karen traditions. If, then, Burma deserves Home Rule, does not Independence deserve, all the more, Independence?

Special Committee appointed by the Karen National Association, Burma, for and on behalf of the Karen Community, Burma.

RANGOON.
5th February, 1929.

PRESENT:

ALL THE MEMBERS OF THE COMMISSION (EXCEPT SIR JOHN SIMON), OF THE CENTRAL COMMITTEE (EXCEPT MR. KIKABHAI PREMCHAND) AND OF THE BURMA PROVINCIAL COMMITTEE.

LORD BURNHAM OCCUPIED THE CHAIR IN THE ABSENCE OF SIR JOHN SIMON.

Deputation from the Karen Elders of Burma.

The deputation consisted of:—

Mr. SYDNEY LOO-NEE.
SRA SHWE BA (Member of the Provincial Committee).

69. The Chairman (Lord Burnham): We have your Memorandum, and also a Memorandum submitted by the Karen National Association. * * *

70. Am I right in assuming that you are satisfied with the existing franchise both for the Legislative Council and for the Legislative Assembly ?—That is so.

71. You do not wish it to be lowered ?—No.

72. What have you to tell us in regard to communal electorates ?—Communal representation is absolutely necessary. It is discussed on page 418 of our Memorandum.

73. You are of opinion that it is no exaggeration to say that the Karens would have utterly failed to obtain representation in the Burma Legislative Council except for communal electorates ?—Absolutely.

74. And you say that unless some such provision is made, it is impossible for Karens to obtain representation on municipalities, circle boards, or district councils ?—That is so.

75. You lament the fact that there is no such provision now made ?—Such provisions are made by the Whyte Committee and thereby we have five communal electorates; and but for that provision it is no exaggeration to say that the Karens would not have any representation.

76. Mr. Hartshorn points out to me that you say on page 419: "The Whyte Committee after very "carefully studying the whole question granted to "the Karens of Burma, as we have already acknow-"ledged, five communal electorates to safeguard "the interest of the Karens. We respectfully submit "to the Simon Commission that the Karen re-"presentation in the Burma Legislative Council "will be adequate and complete if the members of "the said Commission unanimously recommend the "creation of additional Karen electorates, one "each for the City of Rangoon and the following "districts: Isein, Hanthawaddy, Tharrawaddy, "Henzada, Tavoy, Toungoo, Pegu, Salween, Mergui, "and Pyapon." That is your opinion ?—That is so.

77. Does that mean that you are asking for eleven instead of five ?—We are asking for eleven in addition to the existing five.

78. Mr. Hartshorn: That is altogether 16 ?—Yes.

79. The Chairman: That is what you think would be just ?—Yes, and that would be in the spirit of the Reforms, because the idea of the Reforms is to educate us in the art of self-government, and unless opportunities are given us politically, political education will never come.

80. And you say without this provision your community is shut out ?—Exactly.

81. In regard to page 418, the nomination of officials and non-officials, will you tell us something to that in your own words ?—With regard to this, our submission is that so far the working is satisfactory, because what is exactly required is known to Government officials perhaps better than to us. I have a letter here in which one of our Elders says that our Memorandum has not been asking for enough. If, in addition to the communal electorates, some of us can get into these public bodies by nomination, that would be better still. We do not want to ask for too much, so the language of our Memorandum is couched in as moderate a style as we can possibly make it.

82. You wish to remove official control from governing bodies ?—Not remove it, my Lord; just the other way.

Raja Nawab Ali Khan: Which page, please ?

83. The Chairman: Page 418. Yes, I see. I also notice that in the official handbook part I, page 10, para. 24,* it is said that the Karens number altogether 1.2 millions, forming 9 per cent. of the total population. It is also stated: "Of the Karens over one-fifth are outside the area "of the Reforms, leaving nearly one million with-"in that area; of this number over 631,000, "that is more than five-eighths, are found in the five "districts of Amherst, Thaton, Bassein, Myaungmya "and Ma-ubin where Karen communal constituencies "have been established." In regard to the control of the local bodies, you want to have more guidance ?—Exactly.

84. Could you tell us in what particulars, because we have a good deal of evidence on this subject, not only here but in India also. You could refer us to the Memoranda of the Government, if you have them with you. I think it is page 594 of the Report on Local Self-Government.—I have not got that.

85. Generally speaking, you think that the Government ought to exercise more control over the local bodies ?—That is so. The Reforms are new, and we are just learning how to walk, and before we yet know how to walk, if we are made to run there will be some disaster.

86. Sir Hari Singh Gour: You might break your legs.—Might, might not; yes.

87. The Chairman: Then you are in favour of special terms for the adequate representation of your community in the public services ?—In the public services and in the public bodies too. If your Lordship will allow me to go back to page 418, we have submitted that "it is nothing less "than deplorable that whereas ample provision is "made for the representation of numerous non-"indigenous races in Burma on local self-governing "bodies, there is no provision made for the Karens, "who are regarded as an important community, to "secure representation on these bodies except in "only one or two municipalities." Take, for instance, Rangoon. Ample provision is made for other communities which are not indigenous, and we Karens have been left out, and we have been severely left alone. We as a race are not very vociferous: we do not agitate; and the result is that provision is not made for us to enjoy the benefits and carry the burdens that citizens ought to share equally.

88. I observe that during the decade 1911-21 the Karens increased their population by 11 per cent. as compared with about 8 per cent. increase by the Burmans, so you are not declining ?—And we shall be showing better census figures as time goes on.

89. The Chairman: I would inform the Conference that the Karen National Association has now sent its representatives to appear before us, and with your agreement, gentlemen, I think we might ask them to come in. (To the witness) You have no objection to them coming at the same time as yourself ?—No, sir.

90. What is your view as to the big question of the separation of Burma from India ?—We are decidedly in favour of separation.

91. For the reasons which are generally given ?—Yes, and, as we have stated in our Memorandum on page 419 . . .

92. "In our considered opinion the separation of "Burma from India and that alone will make it "possible for the different indigenous races of "Burma—the Burmese, Karens, Kachens, Chins "and Shans—to be usefully welded into one solid "nation. Unless opportunities are open to the "indigenous races of Burma to regard Burma "nationally—and Burma as a separate entity under "the British Crown is the only way!—Burma can "never progress nationally."—That is so.

The Chairman: "As long as Burma is kept "dangling on India's 'dhoti' so long will there "be no cohesion among the indigenous races of "Burma." That is quite clear.

93. Major Attlee: Your community is highly developed educationally, is it not ?—That is so.

94. You spend a great deal of money yourselves, I think, on education, do you not ?—Exactly.

95. Will not that in time gain you a due proportion in the services, without any special provision ?—Even as it is now I think it is agreed that Karen education has progressed quite well, but so far as representation in the public services is concerned, we regret to say that we do not obtain our fair share.

* Vol. XI.

96. Supposing you had a Public Service Commission set up here, then you should not be hampered at all, should you, to get in on your merits ?—No.

97. Why not ?—How can we be hampered if, by our merits, we can prove that we are fit to enjoy the privileges which others enjoy ?

98. Quite. I say if you had a Public Service Commission you ought to be able to get your fair share ?—Yes.

99. And once you are in a service, there comes the question of promotion and so on, does there not ? —Certainly.

100. If you come in with everybody else, would not you be in a better position rather with regard to general promotion, and so on, than if you sought a special position ? A special position of getting in on a nomination might even prejudice you, might it not ?—That would prejudice not only one particular class, but all classes.

101. I am taking the position of members of your community. Do you think it is really desirable that a Civil Service should be allocated to great races, religions, and so on ?—My submission is that the Karens should have a fair share, just as other races have.

102. You do not claim a share in excess of your merits ; you only want a fair share ?—Yes.

103. If for instance a Public Service Commission is set up and you are to be judged only on your merits, you do not want to claim that because you are a separate community, therefore whatever your merits are, you should have a certain proportion of places ?—No, sir.

104. One question with regard to your representation in the council. You have five separate seats. Can you also contest in other constituencies where you have no special seats ?—Yes, we can, but the chances of success are nil.

105. Is it a question of minority or that only a small number of your community is on the register ? —Both. I might add that Karens are a peculiar race. We are not so rich that we can squander money ; neither are we so poor that we have to beg. In these contests you require money.

106. Would you like a regulation made as to the amount that can be spent on election ?—That would not help us very much.

107. Why not ?—Because we have enough for ourselves, but not very much to spare, and the little surplus that remains over will not be sufficient for such a purpose.

108. If you are well organised you can fight the election on a very small amount of money ?—Yes, but the question of minority comes in.

109. Taking the position of your community is there anything to separate you from the Burmans except on the question of race ? Economically you are in the same position as Burmans, are you not ? —Yes, in the matter of religious outlook there is a very marked difference.

110. Is the relationship between the two races improving ?—Yes, it is. Since the introduction of the Reforms we have come to understand each other much better than we did 15 or 20 years ago.

111. Supposing you have got a keen political life in this province and organised parties, the Karens' vote in places like Insein, Hanthawaddy, and so on would be a valuable thing when the strength of the two parties is fairly equal ?—We are out-numbered.

112. Take for instance Hanthawaddy, where you have got a population of something like 18,000 people. That provides a fair voting strength, does it not ?—Yes.

113. And if you have two candidates who are standing there on different political platforms they have to take care to secure or try to secure the Karens' vote, have they not ?—Not necessarily, sir.

114. Supposing you have Burman Liberals and Burman Conservatives as two rival parties and the fighting is centred between them ?—Unless there is a split between our Burman friends the Karens' case is hopeless.

115. Would not the split be conducive to the building up of a healthy life ? —Yes, but not at this stage.

116. I think you have a considerable number of your people in those areas where you have no special electorates ?—Yes.

117. And I take it that in those areas the contest will be between Burman and Burman ?—The contest will be between Burman and Karen.

118. Are you at present running candidates in those constituencies in which you are asking separate electorates ?—Yes. At the last election a Karen stood in Insein, while in Henzada and Tharawaddy Karens stood in the election before the last one.

119 Was it a fight between a Burman and a Karen ?—Yes

120. Only two candidates ?—In Henzada there were four candidates, of whom three were Burmans. Subsequently two Burmans withdrew and the Karen who contested failed.

* * * * * * * *

121. Mr. Hartshorn : You want to have sixteen seats for the Karen community. The Chairman called attention to the fact that you are nine per cent. of the population. There are at present one hundred and three seats, I think, in the present Legislative Council. If you get sixteen seats that will be practically sixteen per cent. of the Council. On what ground are you justified in asking for sixteen per cent. of the seats when you are only nine per cent. of the population ?—It is recognised that the Karens are the second most important race in Burma, and we, as the second most important race, ought to have a fairly larger representation in order that we may educate ourselves politically.

122. We have got another community here, namely, the Anglo-Burman community. They are less than one per cent. of the population . . . ?— They have at present one seat.

123. Yes, but I think they want four additional seats. If you have to get sixteen and they have to get five that would be twenty-one per cent. of the seats for less than ten per cent. of the population. If you have all this representation some of the other communities must be very heavily under-represented ?—I wish to point out that if our Anglo-Burman friends, who are less than one per cent., are asking for five seats the Karens are not making an exorbitant demand when they ask for sixteen seats.

124. That is not my point. How can it be fair to the other communities when you two communities are asking for more than double your proportionate strength ? How to make these concessions that you demand and still be fair to the other communities ? Are there any special reasons why you, as one of the communities, should have a substantially greater number of seats in the Council than you are entitled to on the basis of your population ?—If I may say so, without appearing to be immodest, we Karens are a special race. History shows that so far back as 1837 or even earlier we were regarded as British subjects. Our aim in asking for what we are asking is that there may be mutual help. If you have Karen representatives in the districts which we have named in our Memorandum, you can know what the Karens need for the progress and welfare of their community.

125. Do you not think that the Karen community would be fairly treated if they are given seats in the Council in proportion to their population ?—That would not be an equitable basis, because the fact remains that we are the children of the soil. This is our country, and if we have no voice in shaping our destiny what is the use of our being in this country ?

126. Mr. Cadogan : Major Attlee asked a question with regard to what you call the inadequacy of representation of the Karen community in the Public Services, but I do not think he was satisfied with the reply. I should like to have it elucidated further.

The Karen community is the only community which has lodged this complaint. I would like to know whether there is any ban on the Karens entering Public Services ?—There is no ban, as such, but we think that there is no one to push us on.

127. But how do you measure the inadequacy of representation in the public services ? Surely, it is the merit of the individual entrant that counts. If a Karen is qualified for the Public Services the chances are that he will get into the Service ; if he is not qualified he is not likely to be admitted into the public Services for communal reasons. Why do you claim adequate representation in the public Services ?—My point is that unless you give the man a trial, how are you going to gauge the measure of his ability ? If trials are given to educated Karens to prove their worth and then they fail, that would be another question.

128. Surely, that applies to a member of any other community ?—Yes, but opportunities for the Karen to show his mettle are rare.

129. Whom do you blame for that ?—That is partly due to the innate shyness of the Karen and partly to the overlooking of his claims.

130. Do you think that there is any prejudice whatever against the Karens joining the Public Services ?—I am afraid there is a certain amount of prejudice.

131. The Chairman (Lord Burnham) : Taking the figures supplied by the Government as true, broadly speaking, the Karens are a nation of cultivators ?—So far as this question is concerned it is equally true of other races as well. The large majority are agriculturists. The number of Karens who had taken to the professions and the services fifty years ago was smaller than the number twenty years later, and in twenty years more their number has increased. But so far as agriculture is concerned that is the backbone industry of Burma, and, I think, it will be equally true of other races as well.

132. Sir Hari Singh Gour : I wish to ask you a few questions as regards your relations with the Burmese. I have here the proceedings of the Karen National Union. Do you stand for it ? There are certain facts upon which you both agree. I want to know how far you two gentlemen are in agreement with one another on the general question of the future of the Karens.

The Chairman (Lord Burnham) : I did not ask the question that I put to Mr. Sydney Loo-Nee to Saw Pah Dwai, I am afraid, but if I ask him now to make a statement it would answer your question as to how far he is in agreement with the Karen Elders. Would that meet your view ?

Sir Hari Singh Gour : Yes.

133. The Chairman (Lord Burnham) : How far are you in agreement with the Karen Elders ?—(Saw Pah Dwai) I do not suppose there is any difference as far as the main questions are concerned.—There may be difference in details.

134. Sir Hari Singh Gour : I thought so. Now, the question I wish to ask is this. In the proceedings of the Karen National Union, it is said : " It must be remembered that the Burmese " are in the majority everywhere, and this, coupled " with the natural reservedness of the Karens, " makes the latter meet with misfortunes at every " turn. The misfortunes meant here are concisely " injustice and oppression." You and the Burmese are at loggerheads ? It appears from this statement that your interests are in conflict with those of the Burmese. Is that so ?—Yes.

135. And do you agree with that statement ?—(Mr. Sydney Loo-Nee) Two views may be taken, one of which may be extreme. The Karen Elders think that time is a great healer, and we do not go harping on old history. In former times there had been oppression, and nobody will deny that. The Karen Union seem to be still smarting under the old oppression, but we, the Karen Elders say, let bygones be bygones. As I have already stated, with greater contact and with better education, we bid fair to be very good friends.

136. You are speaking of the future, and I am speaking of the present. I want to know how far the antagonism between the Karens and the Burmans as stated in this resolution exists ? According to this resolution the Karens regard the Burmans as their oppressors ?—I will give you a two-fold answer. You are asking me about the present, and that the present may be clear you have got to go back to the past. The relationship in the past was very deplorable, but as I have already said relationship is getting better. The Karen Union Party thinks that the relationship is not as good or improving as rapidly as it should do, but we hold that we are becoming better friends and in course of time this friendship will improve.

137. The next question is as regards your aptitude for military life. It is said in the resolution at page 4 (Proceedings of the Karen National Union) : " Recruiting for the army and Karen recruits. It " has been asked by recruiters, why Karen young men " have not been coming in so quickly, and why " there have been so many desertions ? The answer " is not far to seek. It is quite natural that the " birds in the jungle that flit free through the woods " do not like to give up their happy abode in exchange " for the golden cage laden around with delicious " fruits in the dreamy land. How much more un- " willing would they be if they knew that the cage was " but iron and that occasional starvation formed " part of the routine of life in it. Again fancy the " life of a bird, once free and happy in the woods, " but now tortured by pokes of pricks and by pinches " from the claws of the hawks and kites that invariably " don the cage. Here is the kerosene oil on the " top of the water again." Is that true, that Karens do not like military life ?—(Saw Pah Dwai) No, it is far from being true.

138. And they desert as soon as they are enlisted. This is the statement you have made.—There are many desertions.

139. The Karens do not like military life at all ? —They do.

140. But you have stated : " fancy the life of a " bird, once free and happy in the woods, but now " tortured," etc.—They do not like the treatment they are having now. If the treatment is improved they will come in.

141. As regards your social progress I find some disquieting statements made by yourself. This is what you have said on page 425 (Memorandum of the Karen National Association) under the heading, " Social Progress " : " There is very little of it in " Burma, and that little is more apparent than real. " What progress can we expect of a people so light, " so loose and so cheap like night-bazaar com- " modities ? By chances they form and by chances " they disintegrate. There are again powerful " destructive forces known in the common name of " self-interests in which money and power play " prominent." That is the statement made by the Karen National Association. You are responsible for it ?—Yes.

142. It that a correct statement ?—From our point of view.

143. Do you support it ?—(Mr. Sydney Loo-Nee) No, not entirely.

144. I find from your Memorandum that you would abolish the High Court and all the Services, the Indian Civil Service, the Provincial Civil Service and everything. You say on page 425 of your Memorandum : " We have no belief in the Indian Civil " Service or Burma Civil Service or Provincial Civil " Service or any other Services. We would at present " propose to invite a reference to the statements made " on page 2 of Annexure IV. Fuller discussion will " be given in the draft scheme herein following," and so on. " Provincial services and recruitment " and of Public Service Commissions. We do not " believe in examinations which make our light " grains abhorably conceited, when they are success- " ful. We want elderly men to be in office and by " election, removable at any time by votes of censure. " Public Service Commissions and the kindred " Commissions, Boards and all are only fine expensive " farces."—That is your view ?—(Saw Pah Dwai) Yes.

145. And is it shared very largely by the Karens ? —I believe so.

146. The majority of them ?—The majority of them.

147. The Elders of the Karens form only a minority ?—I think so.

148. You are a larger body. Now on page 425 you say :—" The British Second Chamber is the greatest " of farces, and perhaps the biggest folly of con- " servatism. There are nations which are run by " one Chamber. Why then give ourselves the " trouble and expenses of having two, with fructuous " delays as the result." Now, you are against the Second Chamber altogether ?—Yes.

149. You would only have one Chamber ?—Yes.

150. You do not believe in a Second Chamber at all ?—Not at all.

151. Regarding them as you do as grand farces ? —Exactly.

152. And you are in favour of Dominion status both for India as well as for Burma ? You say : " The same remarks in 3 (a) above equally apply " here. And if we were required to express our " opinion explicitely we would rather urge for full " responsible government or Dominion Home rule. " Home Rule in India and Burma might be bloody " rule, but blood often purifies rules ; it at least " simplifies them." That is your view ?—Yes.

153. At the same time while you are in favour of responsible government are you opposed to party system : " Party system kills the individuality as " well as the originality, hence the vitality too. " It then makes a man a blind follower and a false " form. There is nothing good in or about it in our " view. It may be said that no one is tied down to " any party, but in many senses he is, and only open " mercenaries are not." So, you are against all party system ?—Exactly.

154. You would abolish the High Court, all Services, the party system and also the Second Chamber ?—Yes.

The Chairman (Lord Burnham) : Is it worth while going through the whole if it ? Of course there is the Karen Elders' view.

155. Sir Hari Singh Gour : But they are only a small minority : I was dealing with the majority. So far as the Elders are concerned, you do not agree with the view of the majority on all these points ?—(Mr. Sydney Loo-Nee) No ; It is not the view of the majority, either.

156. Now, as regards your separate electorates. You want separate electorates and also nomination to supplement the electorates ?—No.

157. You want joint electorates ?—No. We want 11 additional elected members.

158. Through separate electorates ?—Yes.

159. Not joint electorates and reservation of seats to the Karens ?—No.

160. Because you think in a joint electorate you will not get in ?—Yes.

161. Sir Zulfiqar Ali Khan : May I know what is the religion of the Karens ?—The national religion is spirit worship.

162. Are there any Christians ?—Yes, there are many Christians.

163. About how many ? —I have not got the figures with me just now.

164. Are there Muhammadans or Hindus ?—No.

Mr. Campagnac : 693 per thousand of the whole are Christians according to the census.

165. Sir Zulfiqar Ali Khan : What is your total population ?—1.2 millions.

166. I should like to know whether in the event of your getting separation from India you would impose the same condition on the settlers from India as the Burmese want to do ?—That question, I think, is premature. First of all, let us have separation and then work out a scheme. Indians need have no fear because there will be British rule, and I am sure you can trust British justice.

The Chairman (Lord Burnham) : Sir Zulfiqar, according to the census report of 1921 just now quoted, of the Christians here 178,000, or roughly 70 per cent., were Karens.

167. Sir Zulfiqar Ali Khan : One of the deputations said that for naturalisation in Burma they would like to fix a period of 25 years. Would you please tell me whether you have the same notion about naturalisation ?—As I have already stated I think this question is premature and I must ask to be excused from replying.

168. What is your own view ?

Sir Hari Singh Gour : I think they have come for separate representation.—We have come here for separation of Burma from India, for communal representation on a larger scale and for the Karenization of the Services.

169. Sir Zulfiqar Ali Khan : What I understood from your statement was this, that you form the second most numerous community in the province ? —Exactly.

170. And therefore I think your opinions on things here must carry weight ?—That is flattering !

171. That is not flattery. Therefore I would like to know what your view is about naturalisation ? —The view now given would be only an idea and for practical purposes it will be neither here nor there.

172. Why not ?—Because it may be an erroneous idea. It may be an idea which according to the standards of British justice and fair-play may not be acceptable for Burma. The fact is very prominent that it is absolutely necessary to have British rule and guidance.

173. That is true. Nobody denies that.—And so long as you admit that fact I think it must be clear that there is no need to be in a fever of excitement regarding the welfare of Indians in Burma. We are British subjects just as Indians are and if our education means anything, if our Christianity means anything, surely, sir, you can trust your fellow-Indians to us for fair-play.

174. But you must start life with some definite understanding with those who have settled down here, and also, as you yourself are a minority, I think you will concede to other minorities the same privileges which you demand for yourself ?—That is exactly why we want Burma to work out her own national destiny. I do not want to go into past history, but in effect it means that in a certain period of our history we have been unfortunate, and that has a value of its own in that it enables us to feel sympathy for less fortunate people like us.

175. May I know how many representatives you have got in the Council ?—Five.

176. They come from your special constituencies ? —Yes.

177. Can you stand in a general constituency ?— We can, but there is no chance.

178. Dr. Suhrawardy : Am I right in saying that you want 15 per cent. of the seats although you are only 9 per cent of the population, that is, you want representation in excess of your numerical strength on the ground of your historical and political importance ? Is that the reason why you want increased representation, because you think that although you are given an increased representation, it will not diminish the majority considerably, that you will still be in a minority, but at the same time you will be a more effective minority than at present ?— Exactly ; and I may also add that, by having this benefit, our usefulness will increase.

179. U Aung Thin : At page 419 of your memorandum in the third paragraph you have incidentally mentioned about the national progress of Burma. I take it that that is the ideal you want to set up here, incidentally though, I tell you that communalism and communal electorates do interfere with this development. Do you agree with me ?—To a certain extent, yes. They are things which would interfere more or less because we are not in a state of perfection.

180. Yes, of course. I was following very closely the questions put to you by Major Attlee, and I want to put it to you whether it is not due more to the nervousness on the part of your community that you dare not take part in the general election in a general constituency ?—It is a racial fact that the Karens have not got the push of the Burmans.

181. Then how long are you to remain aloof ? The more you remain aloof, I think, the more you would lack in that characteristic. Do you not think that the sooner you merge yourself in the general electorate, the more fusion there would be in your general qualities ?—The more we merge ourselves the more shall we be submerged.

182. Is that your imagination ?—No, it is the natural law.

183. But your ideals are still farther away ?—Yes.

184. The sooner we attain the goal, the better it will be for all of us, is that not so ?—Yes, and to work that out at this stage of our political development communal representation is absolutely necessary.

185. But are you not setting up strong iron fences round you ?—Iron fences to be easily broken down to make room for wooden fences.

186. But then you are making it stronger. You may want to supplant it with gold, but you may find it very hard to break it down ?—For the present and for some time to come it is absolutely necessary. When time shows that those fences can be broken down, they will be broken down.

187. Under the present conditions having communal electorates you have to organise your own community leaving other communities outside, and that tendency will grow stronger as time passes. Am I not right ?—That is why we Karens beg to differ from the Burmans. That is a point on which we Karens and the Burmese disagree. I will give you a concrete example. During the election to send one representative from Burma to the Assembly a Burman and an Indian fought, and the Burman in his own country failed signally. You cannot fight a bigger community.

188. Taking the attitude that you did, you would concede similar communal rights or communal electorates to a community like the Burma Moslems ? —Exactly, sir ; charity begins at home ; and also to the Kachins, the Chins and the Shans.

189. Why not to the Burma Moslems ?—Yes, to the Burma Moslems as well, they are a quasi-indigenous people of this country.

190. And in addition to a community like the Burma Moslems ?—Community like the Burma Moslems, community like the Anglo-Burmans and the Anglo-Indians. That would be fair play.

191. I would like just to read out to you one sentence from the Government Memorandum. In paragraph 24 (page 11 of Vol. XI) it is stated :—" the " Talaings, at one time supreme over the deltaic " portion of Burma, are being absorbed by the " Burmese. There is no likelihood that the Karens " will undergo similar assimilation." I take it that the Talaings are a more important race historically, they were at one time supreme over a particular portion of Burma, but that the Karens had never had that fortune ?—You cannot say dogmatically that the Karens had no fortune.

192. I am only drawing a comparison between the two races, the Talaings and the Karens. At one time the Talaings were supreme in Burma and are now being absorbed by the Burmese, while the Karens had not had that eminence ?—And the Karens have not had that absorption.

193. That fusion between the Talaings and the Burmese by closer touch. Is that preferable from your point of view, or not preferable ?—If the Burman would give up his nationality and become Indian, would that be preferable or not ?

194. I am just putting it to you. Will you please answer whether in your opinion you would like that sort of fusion between the Karens and the Burmese just as it is happening between the Talaings and the Burmans for the future goal of yours ?—If you will excuse me, I do not think that it is fair to attribute this to me. I am not a Talaing ; I am a Karen, and so far as we Karens are concerned, we wish to preserve our nationality, and I think that is an absolutely legitimate aspiration.

195. U Ba U : Do you both agree as regards your ideal for Dominion Home Rule for Burma ?

Lord Burnham : We find that from their Memorandum.

196. U Ba U : At present there are only about 50 seats in the Council to represent rural areas, and so one member of the Council has to represent over two lakhs of population, and if further advance of Reforms comes, there will be more electorates, the constituencies will become less in area and in that way the Karen members being neither very few nor very many, in Burma, you will be able to return your own candidate in a smaller constituency. Is that not possible ?—So far as we are concerned, our grievance is that in our own country there is not a single urban constituency for the Karens, whereas our Indian friends, who are properly speaking aliens here, have six urban constituencies returning eight representatives.

197. I am only asking your views about it. Take for instance Toungoo, which is returning two candidates now. Supposing it has to return four candidates, cannot your community in that case get a seat there ?—Unless it is made a Karen constituency, I am afraid there is no chance.

198. The Karens number about one-fourth or one-sixth of the population in the Toungoo district, and so you are likely to return one member successfully since you are large in numbers there ?—If our number is larger there, why not give us a seat there ?

199. In a similar way you will have seats all over Burma wherever there are a good number of Karens ? —I do not think it is right to say " all over Burma," because in Upper Burma you do not find Karens.

200. Of course, what I meant was wherever there are Karens ?—Yes, in Lower Burma.

201. And you say you do not have representation on the local bodies. I understand that the Karens live in a number of villages. Does not the Local Self-Government Act of Burma operate in your villages ?—It does.

202. If there is a group of Karen villages, do not those villages form a circle board ?—If the Burmese villages are taken together, they would, and the Burmese being in the majority in the villages, the Karens have no chance.

203. If you will take only a particular circle of villages, I do not think there will be a majority of Burmans. On the other hand, there will be a majority of Karens, and invariably you will have a chance of working up. You need not be disheartened. —Thank you for your encouragement. I appreciate it.

204. The Karens on the whole number about one million ?—1.2 millions, as I have already said.

205. And I understand that the Burmese as a body also number about the same ?—I cannot say.

206. They do ; they are only about one million and odd, and yet they keep up their own national status, and they are still getting the benefits of Reforms and all that. Cannot you also get that same benefit ?—(No answer).

207. Do you gentlemen of your Association represent both the Christians and the Buddhists ? —(Saw Pah Dwai) Yes.

208. How many Buddhists are there in your Association, or at least can you give us the percentage of the Buddhists ?—(Mr. Sydney Loo-Nee) I am afraid I cannot say.

209. There is very little, I think ?—We Karens regard one another as brothers.

210. Without regard to the religion ?—Yes without regard to the religion.

211. I understand that there are only about 44,000 of Christian Karens, whereas there are over 9 lakhs of Buddhist Karens ?—I can give you facts, but I am not in a position to give you figures.

212. So, I believe you are trying to bring the Buddhists among the Karens into your own fold ?—Yes.

213. Mr. Rafi : At page 419 of your Memorandum you say in the third paragraph :—" In our considered opinion the separation of Burma from " India and that alone will make it possible for the " different indigenous races of Burma—the Burmese, " Karens, Kachins, Chins, and Shans—to be usefully " welded into one solid nation." And you go on to ask for separate electorates, do you not ?—At present.

214. I just wanted to ascertain as to whether these two ideas are not inconsistent with each other ? —No, they are not inconsistent. Take, for instance, the Indian nation. That is one nation, but you have got there the Bengali, the Tamil, the Telegu, the Gujarathi and so on, and they have separate electorates there.

215. You do contemplate a time when you will have a common electorate ?—Yes, but if I may add that time is far distant. At present, in order to have cohesion, we must work by compartments, and then later on have bigger compartments and ultimately have a large common room.

216. You think that the present conditions are such that you ought to have separate electorates although in course of time you would come under the general electorate ?—Yes, exactly.

217. You complained that the Indians have a larger number of representatives than you have. Is it not a fact that the Indians have contributed labour and capital to the development of Burma, while you have not ?—We have, in our own sphere, Mr. Rafi.

218. To an unappreciable extent, I take it ?—I do not think so. We till our fields, and then the Indian comes to reap our paddy.

219. Lord Burnham : You fertilize the land ?—And the cream of it is taken by our Indian friends.

220. Mr. Rafi : Who employs the Indian labour ?—You, the Karens and the Burmans. Why do you employ them ?—Because they come.

221. Why do you tolerate him ? (No answer.)

222. Mr. Campagnac : In your opinion, has there been a tendency in the matter of government appointments to give preference to Burman Buddhists ?—(Mr. Sydney Loo-Nee) I have no personal knowledge. (Saw Pah Dwai) I do not know what the tendency is ; but the result is that the Burmans always get it.

223. No matter what the qualifications of the other candidates are ?—Yes.

224. You were an elected member in the first Legislative Council ?—Yes.

225. During the life of that Council I believe on more than one occasion the Karens voted with the Nationalist party and against the Government ?—Yes, sometimes. Sometimes we voted with the Government also.

226. Although you were elected by separate electorates you did on occasions vote with the people ?—Yes.

227. Mr. Eusoof : I find in Schedule II of the Burma Electoral Rules a Karen is defined to include a Taunghthu. Can you tell us who the Taunghthus are ?—(Mr. Sydney Loo-Nee) There are so many clans of Karens, Sgaws, Pwos, Bghai, Paku, Monaybghar and so on.

228. Even amongst the Karens you say there are several castes ?—There is no caste system among us. They are simply divided into tribes.

229. There are different tribes ?—(Saw Pah Dwai) Yes.

230. According to the definition given here, the Taungthu is one of the tribes. I want to know whether you represent this class of people classed Taunghthus ?—I represent the Karens.

231. Are there any Taunghthus in your Association? (Mr. Sydney Loo-Nee) Not that I know of.

232. Do you know the number of Taunghthus in Burma ?—Regarding the figures I have already said I cannot give exact figures.

233. Do you know anything about these Taunghthus ?—Karens and Taunghthus intermarry.

Lord Burnham : I find the following definition here. " A Karen includes a Taunghthu and means " a person belonging to any race which the local " Government may by notification in the Gazette " declare to be a Karen or Taunghthu race for the " purpose of these rules."

234. Mr. Eusoof : Do you maintain that the Taunghthus are distinct from the Karens ?—(Saw Pah Dwai) I understand that the Taungthus are the offshoot of the Karens.

235. Are they of the same race ?—If they are the offshoot that means that they belong to the same race.

236. How many members are there on the list of your Association who belong to the Taunghthu race ? —I should like to answer that question by saying, how many Buddhists are there on the list of the Buddhist Registers. The thing is this. We consider all the Karens as one unit. We do not mention the names of each separate tribe.

237. You have been a member of the Legislative Council on two occasions. You know the distinction that is drawn between these two people, the Karens and the Taunghthus. If they belong to the same race where is the necessity to draw any distinction ?—The names of the different tribes only are given.

238. I desire to know how many members of the Taunghthu tribe are in your Association ?—That I cannot tell you.

239. Perhaps you remember that the Karen member of the last Council was a Taunghthu ? —Yes.*

240. He was a chairman of the district Council ?—No ; he was never a chairman.*

241. I want to know whether that gentleman is a member of your Association.

You have stated that you have very little chance of being elected if you were to stand for the general constituency. What are your reasons for saying that ?—(Mr. Sydney Loo-Nee) We are in the minority. We are the second race of Burma.

242. What is the nature of your relationship with the Burmans and other communities in Burma ? —are you friendly ?—We are friendly with all people.

243. There is no competition whatsoever between the Karens and other communities ?—In respect of what ?

244. Anything ?—When you contest an election there is rivalry.

245. Regarding the question of Services your complaint is that the members of your community are rarely appointed. Is it not a fact that the recruitment is either by competitive examination or by a selection board ?—(Saw Pah Dwai) Yes, but many do not succeed in getting the appointments.

246. Take the police or the magistracy in Paan. When the Government find that the members of your community are poorly represented in these departments, do they not appoint you in greater numbers ?—It is so for the last few years.

247. That policy is pursued on your representation ? —On account of my fight.

248. U Ba Shin : What percentage do you claim in the Karenization of services, 16 per cent ?—(Mr. Sydney Loo-Nee) Yes.

249. Your population as mentioned in the Government Memorandum is 1.2 millions. If on that percentage the Burman community were to claim representation for 9 millions would you agree that according to the percentage you claim there would be over 144 representatives on the Council ?—I do not wish to commit myself to any figures.

250. According to the percentage you claim it would be quite fair for the Burman community to claim that representation ?—I am making a claim here on behalf of the Karens and not on behalf of the Burmans.

* The witness subsequently intimated that the questioner and he had different persons in mind.

251. I suppose you know that the seat for the Legislative Assembly was contested by a Burman and non-Burman and eventually the Burman was defeated and an Indian was elected.

Lord Burnham : We have already referred to that.

252. Sra Shwe Ba : What class of Karens usually live in towns ?—Educated Karens.

253. Why do the majority of the Karens generally not live in towns ?—I think the times are changed now and the number of Karens coming to the town is increasing.

254. Is it a fact that the Karens do not want to live in towns for fear of being oppressed by the Burmans ?—There used to be that fear ; but I think that fear is greatly diminishing now.

255. Do you think that the Buddhist Karens and the Burman Buddhists have the same view in regard to religion ?—No. The Buddhist Karen is a spirit worshipper and the Burman Buddhist is an idolator.

Memorandum submitted by the Burma Moslem Community.

We beg to submit this Memorandum on behalf of the Burma Moslem Community, numbering about three lacs. The community consists of those Moslems :—

(i) born in Burma of Burmese parentage on both sides (popularly known as the Zerbadees),
(ii) born in Burma of mixed Indian and Burmese parentage (also known as Zerbadees),
(iii) born and domiciled in Burma of Indian parentage on both sides,
(iv) those born outside Burma and settled down permanently here.

The Burma Moslem community consisting of the persons described above is not only an influential community, but also one with historical connections with the past. Among the members include those who are in the Services and the professions, merchants, and traders with fairly large vested interests and stake in the country. Their importance as a community was recognised by the Government until a few years ago, when the latter changed their attitude considerably and their interests do not seem to be regarded to-day with the same seriousness and importance which, in virtue of their position, the community are entitled to. With the introduction of the new Reforms, the place of this minority community, whose rights had been hitherto zealously protected by the Government, has been relegated to the background, so much so that even the safety of the community to-day is threatened. The Burma Moslem community desire special protection in the same manner as the other minority communities in Burma. As regards the historical aspect of the community, we beg to state that our connection with the country dates back to the time when Burma was ruled by her own kings. References are not wanting in the early history of Burma to the days when the Moslem community in Burma played their legitimate part in the commercial, social and political economy of the country. The whole countryside bears testimony to this fact inasmuch as there are villages and other areas in the various parts of Burma where exist people professing our religion and claiming descent from Moslem ancestors—immigrant traders, warriors and others who had settled in this, our homeland, centuries ago. These people, in all respects except their religion, can claim to be as much Burmans as the present-day descendants of other indigenous races. In fact, the community may go so far as to claim that their lot under the rule of the Burmese dynasties was, perhaps, happier than their present condition.

With regard to our representative capacity, we have to point out that the Burma Moslem Society of Rangoon in conjunction with the Young Moslems' Union, Mandalay, which are two of the most prominent organisations representing Burmese Moslems of this province, got into touch with representative Moslem elders in different parts of the province with the result that the Memorandum now submitted may be said to embody the collective views of the Burma Moslem community in the province as a whole. We thus take the liberty of speaking for and on behalf of all the people enumerated in the beginning of this Memorandum, without, however, encroaching on the right of individual organisations or members of the Burma Moslem community to make their own separate representations.

NEED FOR REPRESENTATION.

The Burma Moslems above described have been, as we have already mentioned, labouring under a set of special disabilities, political, social, educational, and economic. Whereas previous to the introduction of the Government of India Act, 1919, into this province, the community's wants and requirements were attended to with paternal care by the Government ; they have been, since the inauguration of the Reforms, treated with scant attention. This growing lack of recognition of the claims of this community may, we venture to think, be traced to the cry, " Burma for the Burmans," which, legitimate as it may seem, has been interpreted to mean, " Burma for the Burman Buddhists." The community, as its name indicates, professing the religion of Islam, has begun to be thrown outside the pale comprised in the term " Burman." The members of this community, who are Burmans in every respect and have a right to be classed as such, have for unknown reasons been classed under the category of " Kalas " or " foreign immigrants." The community feel that they have been made to lose their rights day by day through various indirect and imperceptible processes meant to undermine their importance as a community. They claim that in any future Constitution that may be proposed or accepted for Burma, their claim to be regarded as Burman citizens in every respect shall be recognised and their fullest rights and privileges amply safeguarded. The fact that the community profess Islam should not be made into a cause for classing them under the category of non-Burmans. Owing to their importance, the community claim legitimate political rights and such special protections as are deemed necessary in the case of a helpless minority. We claim adequate representation of our community on a communal basis on all district and circle Boards, village committees, educational Boards, municipalities, public bodies and the Provincial Legislature to the extent of ten per cent. of the seats that may be allotted in each. While we recognise that for nation-building purposes the principle of non-communal representation is a desideratum, we are forced to demand that the representation of our community should be on a communal basis, because we believe that the attitude of our Burmese brethren towards members of our community has not been such as to inspire a feeling of security in them. On the whole, Burman Buddhists have not looked with approval on the political and educational aspirations of our community and have exhibited deplorable signs of hostility towards them. The Burma Moslem community feel that in the absence of communal representation they will practically go unrepresented in all public and legislative bodies. The working of the system of general electorate in which some members of our community have been included as a result of the recommendation of the Whyte Committee on the Reforms has not been quite happy. Though it is true that in the Provincial Legislature a member or two of our community have been returned by a general electorate, such return, we venture to submit, has been purely accidental and could be explained by the presence at the moment of factors which happened to turn out favourably to the Burma Moslem candidates. We fear that with the growing intensity of political antagonism on the part of the majority of Burman Buddhists, the Burma Moslem candidate, in the future elections for a general constituency, will not stand the least chance of being returned to the Councils.

We have no intention of placing before the Royal Commission any cut-and-dried Constitution. Suffice it to say that whatever Constitution is ultimately adopted for Burma, our rights should be safeguarded in the fullest manner possible.

SEPARATION OF BURMA FROM INDIA.

On the question of separation of Burma from India, which seems to be engaging the serious attention of all minority and a section of the majority communities in Burma, as also, we believe, the Burma official circles, we venture to submit that separation of this province from India at the present juncture will not be to the best interests of Burma. We, nevertheless, recognise the force of the argument behind the demand for readjustment of the financial relations between Burma and India and we are prepared to concede that such relationship requires a thorough revision with a view to release the financial obligations of Burma to India in such substantial manner as in the opinion of experts could be done so as to enable Burma to develop her own material resources and nation-building objects. If, however, the majority of the Burmese Buddhist community desire separation, we have not the least intention of standing in the way of such realisation.

THE FRANCHISE.

On the question of franchise, we are quite satisfied with the existing type. In our opinion, the present franchise has worked satisfactorily in spite of occasional lapses, which are quite unavoidable in the initial stages of political education of a people. The community further want the restriction against females becoming members of the Council removed.

EDUCATION.

Ever since the advent of the British to Burma the educational needs of the community have been a matter of special concern to the educational authorities. In all reports of public instruction in Burma, a chapter used to be devoted exclusively to Moslem education in Burma. We regret to point out that with the introduction of the Reforms this matter has not received the importance that it deserves, so much so that matters pertaining to the educational advancement of the community, important as they are, have now dwindled down from a chapter consisting of several pages of the report to but a small paragraph.

This has naturally caused considerable anxiety to the community who reasonably apprehend that the problem of the education of their children has ceased to be regarded with seriousness under the reformed Government. And these fears have been perfectly justified in view of the numerous cases of hardships which the children of the community have had to face in matters educational all round. Not only have the children of Burma Moslems not been given adequate encouragement and support by the State, but even their admission into some educational institutions, in a number of cases, has been fraught with difficulties, which it has not been so in the case of the children of Burman Buddhists. Owing to the lack of organised efforts on the part of the Burma Moslems, owing to their staunch loyalty to Government and extreme patience, disabilities after disabilities have begun to be heaped upon them. The community desire that the Government should resume the same active, sympathetic and abiding interest in the educational progress and welfare of the Burma Moslem community consistently with their policy towards them in the past. The community, we submit, should be given every facility for higher education, literary and technical, and also their adequate representation on educational bodies and the University Council.

PUBLIC APPOINTMENTS AND SERVICES.

The community demand a fair share in all public appointments and Services proportionate to their importance and numerical strength. They feel that during recent years there has been a dangerously marked tendency to regard members of their community as foreigners and interlopers in the matter of appointment to the Services. They seem to have been singled out for exclusion from the services on the score of their religion, their names, and modes of dress which, in a number of cases resemble those of Indian Moslems. Selection Boards on which members of their community are seldom represented have not treated the cases of bright, promising and deserving young men of the Burma Moslem community with sympathy or justice. The community after their bitter experience, are not very much impressed with the methods of these so-called Selection Boards, and would like to suggest the appointment of candidates by open competitive examinations.

As proof of the inadequate representation of the Burma Moslem community in the services we beg to quote the following figures from the report of census in Burma for the year 1921 :—

PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION :

Indigenous races	..	27,004 total workers.
Burma Moslems	..	468 total workers.

PUBLIC FORCES :

Indigenous races	..	15,872 total workers.
Burma Moslems	..	176 total workers.

The community, therefore, feel strongly that their members who are eligible for the public Services should not be penalised on the score of their religion, their names or modes of dress. As a minority community they look up to the Government to protect their interests in so far as their representation in the public Services are concerned.

CONCLUSION.

The Burma Moslem community, it may be said in conclusion, have permanently settled down in Burma. They know of no other home except Burma. The majority of them are born in Burma and die in Burma. They have all their properties and vested interests in Burma. They regard this province as the land of their birth, adoption and domicile. In the matter of patriotism and in regard to efforts towards social, educational and political amelioration of the country as a whole, they are not a shade less than the Burman Buddhists. They contributed their own share of men and money in no grudging spirit during the Great War. Their participation in all public charities is far beyond their own material resources as a community. In politics, they belong with few exceptions to the moderate school; and are wedded to constitutional methods. They have, with few exceptions, avoided extreme politics for which they have even incurred the wrath of Indians and Burmans of the extreme ranks in the Province. They have been second to none in their complete identification of their own interests with those of the province. They have no desire to thwart the political aspirations of their Burman Buddhist brethren with whom their lot is cast in this country. In demanding the special safeguards and protections which they have done in this Memorandum, they have been actuated by the best of motives and the natural instinct of self-preservation. It is far from their intention to stand in the way of Burma attaining Home Rule, but it has been their honest concern to safeguard their own positions which they have been driven to do in face of open political hostility evinced towards them by the majority community. Under the circumstances they have no other alternative but to present their case, strong as it is, before the Royal Statutory Commission.

Memorandum submitted by the Moslem League, Burma.

In placing our Memorandum we owe an explanation. We began work too late and consequently it was not possible for us to follow the indications and fulfil the desires embodied in the invitation. Our observations and suggestions generally refer to Burma unless where otherwise stated. We have omitted such matters as are, in our opinion, not of our immediate concern. Our opinion is not necessarily the opinion of the whole Moslem population of the province.

We are in full accord with the policy of progressive realisation of responsible Government by the gradual development of self-governing institutions, as progress in this direction can only be achieved by successive stages.

We oppose the separation of Burma on whatever principle the demand may be based, as in our opinion no separate political evolution will hasten her steps towards the objective nor the false issue of racial discrimination will help her cause.

We maintain that there is no race feeling in the mass and inter-racial marriage system had been its recognised social institution. Apart from our landed, agricultural, industrial and commercial interest mostly our domestic life is thus inseparably bound up with the country.

We demand equal status of citizenship in the economy of Burma by a statutory declaration and our communal representation in all the branches of the Administration—Government or public—of the province.

The population of the whole province is made up as follows :—

Buddhists ..	11,201,943
Animists ..	702,587
Muhammadans ..	500,592
Hindus	484,432
Christians ..	257,106
Confucians ..	14,131
Sikhs	4,843
Jains	1,135
Jews	1,135
Brahmos ..	448
Zoroastrians ..	380
Aryas	270
Shintaists ..	45
Others	18
Total ..	13,169,065

It may be noted that apart from the overwhelming Buddhist majority, the Hindus are also in majority in all the divisions except Arakan, Sagaing and Meiktila owing to our uneven distribution as it appears from the following table made up of the Buddhist, Hindu and Muhammadan communities :—

Arakan Division :	Buddhist.. ..	596,694
	Muhammadans ..	218,737
Pegu Division :	Buddhist.. ..	1,848,999
	Hindus	252,530
	Muhammadans ..	102,095
Irawaddy Division	Buddhist.. ..	1,835,026
	Hindus	54,447
	Muhammadans ..	38,297
Tenasirim Division :	Buddhist.. ..	1,359,574
	Hindus	76,389
	Muhammadans ..	63,296
Magwe Division :	Buddhist.. ..	1,376,446
	Hindus	12,209
	Muhammadans ..	7,768
Mandalay Division :	Buddhist.. ..	638,118
	Hindus	37,274
	Muhammadans ..	28,961
Sagaing Division :	Buddhist.. ..	1,210,001
	Hindus	10,658
	Muhammadans ..	12,517
Meiktila Division	Buddhist.. ..	1,153,639
	Hindus	11,616
	Muhammadans ..	24,087

Except in large municipalities we have no separate electorates for our communal representation, either in the Legislative Council or in other public bodies. In the existing Indian electorate for the Provincial Legislative Council we have to face the same Hindu Moslem problem as in other provinces. We have no communal protection and our community had been the chief sufferer in social, educational and political progress.

For our political existence separate electorate is of vital importance and it may be noted that in spite of our recognised loyalty and extreme religious tolerance during the Great War the special representation with separate electorates secured to us in 1909 was not given to us in Burma by the last Reforms.

However, in our opinion, the present Legislative Council should be enlarged in size and composition in order to give prominence to the representations of the various communities and interests by direct election in which the proportion of our communal representation on a communal basis should be one-eighth of its total strength and also our representation in municipalities and all other public bodies should be on the same basis.

We also consider it necessary to enlarge the present total strength of the Legislative Assembly and the Council of State with elected majority and to concede a special franchise to our community in Burma for both the Indian Chambers.

We consider it necessary to make franchise as broader as possible, but we are not in favour of adult suffrage. There is not much of reality in the present basis of representation owing to the questionable quality of votes. In our opinion the method of voting should be improved. We propose the following electoral qualifications for all groups and communities :—

(a) All persons in whose names any revenue, rent or land or house rates, cesses and taxes are paid.

(b) All firms, corporate bodies or joint families by their duly authorized agents in whose names any revenue, rent or land or house rates, cesses and taxes are paid.

(c) All literates.

The names of such persons shall only be entered in the Electoral Rolls, on completion of which identification cards should be issued to every voter by the collecting authorities concerned.

This measure, in our opinion, will lead to the use of votes with perception and effect, and will encourage in representatives a sense of responsibility to the people.

Our representation in the public services is practically nil. Special mention is to be made of the total disregard of our communal representation in the appointment of Judges of the High Court of Judicature at Rangoon. With the exception of the Army and to some extent in the lowest grades in the Police, the doors of both the branches of Administration and Force are for all intents and purposes closed to us. As we have no complete statistics at our disposal, our position in the public services can be judged from the following available figures.

Public Administration :
Indigenous Races	27,404	Total workers.
Burma Moslems	468	do.
Public Force :
Indigenous Races	15,872	do.
Burma Moslems	176	do.

That there exists a racial discrimination in the public services cannot be gainsaid. It had led a good number of our young aspirants to adopt Buddhist names and to turn renegades to Islam. Its moral effect has threatened our social life and our future is at stake. In the civic affairs also the same spirit is conspicuous. In spite of our large contributions towards the revenue income of the Municipal Corporation of Rangoon our place is hardly traceable in its establishment, which absorbs more than one-tenth of its total income. It cannot be contended that there are no qualified professional men and educated class among us, the fact is that the method of selection has reduced the number of Moslem applicants to its lowest level.

We demand that our representation in Public Services—the Government Department and the Public Bodies—including all grades of the Judicial Department should also be one-eighth of their respective total strength.

As regards Indianisation scheme a fair proportion should be reserved for our community in Civil Service, Army, Navy and other important services. We propose that important posts maintained by the public bodies such as Executive Officer, Engineer, Secretary, Public Health Officer, Assessor, etc., should be filled by a Selection Board directly under the Government control on a suitable basis.

We demand that one-eighth of all grants in aid of education, religion, charity and for social purposes whether given by the Government or a local body to be reserved for our institutions.

In view of our vast interest in land, trade, commerce and industry of the country we demand equal treatment in the distribution of agricultural and industrial loans, grants, subsidies, bounties and other forms of encouragement. We also demand full protection of our shipping industry against the exploitation of our coastal trade by the foreign mercantile shipping.

We claim full right as to the possession of land, forest, concessions, grants and other privileges and urge that the present restrictions in respect of same should be removed and no racial discrimination should be encouraged in disposing of the tenders or contracts for sales, leases or rights or the supplies of stores or labour to the Government Departments, Railways, Port Trust, Municipalities, District Boards, and other public bodies.

We insist upon introducing a change in the Educational policy. In Burma during the year 1925–26 the total expenditure on education including expenditure incurred in the Public Works Department on educational buildings, etc., is Rs. 1,72,41,598 and the average expenditure per head of the population is Rs. 1–4–10. Out of the above amount a sum of Rs. 18,11,578 including expenditure on educational buildings, etc., is spent alone on the European Education, a small community consisting of a total population of 25,005 persons and accordingly the average expenditure per head of European population is about Rs. 72–7–2. Thus it is obvious that a policy of judicious allotment in expenditure is urgently called for.

In his report for the year 1925–26, the Director of Public Instruction has referred to the Urdu trouble. He says " the Deputy Inspectors support their co-religionists on the need for this language, one of them on the curious ground that many Burmese Moslems go on pilgrimage to Mecca. I fancy they are startled when they get there at the shocking ignorance of Urdu among the local Buddhos."

Again in the Seventh Quinquennial Report for the years 1922–23 to 1926–27 he says that as the home language of the Muhammadan children who attend these schools is Burmese or Bengali (in Arakan). Despite this fact, Urdu is the vernacular taught in these schools by teachers who frequently have very little grip of the language themselves, the result is that the children leave from the Lower Primary School with little or nothing to show for their two or three years schooling.

It is a recognised fact that Urdu is a lingua franca of the East, and there is no better medium to impart religious instruction for Moslem children and to develop cosmopolitanism irrespective of the linguistic distribution of Asiatic races. We strongly recommend its retention up to the High School standard for the Moslem students throughout Burma.

We deem the preceding safeguards to be essential to our existence in Burma and we will oppose all changes in the constitution unless and until they are guaranteed to us.

Rangoon, 24*th January*, 1929.

SUPPLEMENTARY MEMORANDUM SUBMITTED BY THE MOSLEM LEAGUE, BURMA.

With reference to our demand for full protection against the exploitation of our coastal trade by the foreign mercantile shipping mentioned in our Memorandum we deem necessary to submit a fuller explanation as to some of the problems of the indigenous shipping industry of Burma.

Burma has an extensive seaboard and Akyab, Moulmeim and Syriam had been her important outlets from time immemorial. With the advent of British rule and the immense development of her overseas trade, Rangoon became a centre of high importance and one of the most progressive seaports in the East.

The establishment of steamship service ousted the country sailing crafts, which were engaged in her coastal and overseas trade. It was a great blow to her indigenous shipping industry and an uphill task for her national regeneration.

Some time back, the first impulse of revival of the shipping industry came from the deck passengers' suffering which resulted in the establishment of a regular steamship service between Burma and Bengal by Bengal Steam Navigation Co., Ltd.

The Company had two well-equipped steamers for passengers, and cargo traffic and fared well till a passage and freight war was waged against it by the foreign shipowners, and consequently it had to close down after struggling hard for five years.

After an interval of about 20 years, towards the end of the year 1927, Mr. Abdul Bari Chowdhury, a well-known merchant of Rangoon, re-established the Burma-Bengal Service with Hedjaz Straits Steamship Company's Steamers, which were suddenly withdrawn by the Company in January, 1928.

Mr. Chowdhury re-opened the Service under the name of Bengal Burma Steam Navigation Co., which was subsequently converted into a public limited liability company in July, 1928.

Against this newly-formed Company the rate war was again carried on with fresh vigour and the less said about its objectionable feature the better. One of the most glaring means used in fighting and discouraging the pioneers of the indigenous shipping concern of Mr. Chowdhury was by running launches against his riverine services of seventy years standing, apart from their action against the Company.

It may be noted that during the last thirty-five years several indigenous inland shipping concerns had been wiped off by such unjust competition and some of their names and descriptions are as follows :

1. Yunan Co., Proprietor Salebhoy. Service Yandoon to Pantanaw. 8–10 Launches, about 40 years ago.
2. Tara Charan Pal, Service—Kyawtan to Thongwa. 10 Launches, about 36 years ago.
3. Dawson, Hlaing. 4 launches, about 32 years ago.
4. Narayan Chetty. Service—Kyaiklat, Twante and Dedaye. 4 Launches, about 25 years ago.
5. Kali Comar Singha. Service—Yandoon, Wakema, etc. 5 Launches, about 25 years ago.
6. Burma River Transport. Proprietor, Mr. Maneckji. Service—Moulmeingyun Wakema, etc. 7 Launches, about 15 years ago.
7. Joy Chandra Shaha & Osman Ali. Service—Eime and Myaungmya. 4 Launches, about 14 years ago.
8. Gherao. Service—Yandoon, etc. 2 Launches. about 12 years ago.
9. Golam Hoosain Atcha & Nobo Comar Dey. Service—Bassein, Thayagon, etc. 12 Launches, about 10 years ago.
10. Phayataga U Shwe Gale. Service—Moulmein, etc. 11 Launches, about 10 years ago.
11. Tofarali Mean Saheb & Dawood Atcha. Service—Pantanaw, Wakema, Maubin, etc. 4 Launches, about 10 years ago.
12. Dawood Atcha. Service—Bogale, etc. 2 Launches, about 10 years ago.

The names and descriptions of the existing inland shipping concerns are as follows :—

1. Mr. A. B. Chowdhury. Rangoon, Pagandaung Service. 17 Launches.
2. Monoo Miyan Serang. Service—some stations in Delta line. 15 Launches.
3. Mobarakali Sawdagar. Service—Yandoon, Moulmeingyun, etc. 5 Launches.
4. Monoo Myan Serang and Arbanali Sawdagar. Service—Myaungmya Wakema, Labota, etc. 8 Launches.

These existing concerns are of long-standing and are struggling hard for their existence. It cannot be contended that such competitions are carried on on healthy lines and that a policy of judicious protection is not called for.

Protection of indigenous shipping industry is a matter of vital importance, particularly for Burma, as she almost entirely owes her existence to her overseas commerce. It is based on the principle of self-preservation and restoration of what is her own.

Against the aggressive foreign competition and ruthless exploitation of our economic resources we have every right to protect our interest by all lawful measures. It is our earnest desire not to deprive anyone of his legitimate share in the trade and commerce, but we shall not allow to wrongfully take away from us anything which is our own.

We hold that the existing shipping ring is a menace to our interest and a barrier in the way of Burma rice to compete successfully in overseas markets. It was only with cheaper freight of Bengal–Burma Line that Burma rice was sold at a cheaper price than Saigon rice in Bengal when famine was threatening her last year.

We strongly support the Coastal Reservation Bill, introduced in the Indian Legislative Assembly by Mr. S. N. Haji, which has unnecessarily drawn a good deal of attention to the foreign capitalists in the various spheres of commercial activity and it is obvious even to a casual observer, that there is a concerted action to repress the growth of indigenous enterprises, and that in regard to shipping there is a concentrated opposition to the Bill. We urge that its passage be expedited in view of the urgent need for protection.

We again demand that full protection be given to the indigenous shipping trade against the aggressive competition of non-Indian concerns and necessary steps be taken to regulate the coastal freight and passages until such competition is removed, and that in view of the payment of about two and a half lakhs of rupees yearly as subsidy by the Burma Government to the Irrawaddy and Arakan Flotilla Companies, the existing indigenous shipping concerns should also be adequately subsidised.

Dated 29th January, 1929.

Memorandum submitted by the Provincial Tanzim Committee, Burma.

Before dealing with those questions on which the future of Indians rest, it is necessary to state in brief the mutual aims of the Government and the governed.

Like all other nations the people of India are entitled to control and direct the Government of their own country. But as we are divided into numerous races, castes, and sects, and as we are thought generally backward in education and political training, full powers of government cannot be immediately transferred into our hands. For the proper administration of these powers two Chambers of the legislature known as the Council of State and the Legislative Assembly were established to co-operate with the Central Government and one Chamber known as the Legislative Council was established in each province for the same purpose. It was further provided that in each province the Governor should appoint two or more ministers from among the elected members of the Legislative Council to administer what are known as the Transferred Departments, that is departments, the administration of which subject to the general control of the Governor was transferred into the hands of the ministers and thus in a sense to the Legislative Council and through its members ultimately the people of the province. With regard to other departments the Council was given the right of criticism and suggestion. The object of this association was to associate the people of the country and to train them up for the ultimate assumption of full control over the administration.

But the introduction was based on a fundamental mistake as the result of an understanding arrived at between the Indian National Congress and the All-India Moslem League, whereby in the Legislative Councils of Bengal and Punjab, two provinces in which the Moslems are in a majority the number of seats allotted to Hindus or the Hindus and Sikhs, practically gave these communities a majority in the elected sections of the councils. The North West Frontier Province was excluded from the operation of the New System on political and military considerations and this exclusion was also operated to the prejudice of Moslems. It was further provided at the time that at the expiry of ten years from the introduction of the Montagu-Chelmsford Reforms of 1919 a commission would be sent out to India to enquire into the working of this system and to make a report as to whether the working of the system justified its extension or called for its curtailment.

Centuries of subjection have made the Hindus entirely incapable of adopting a generous outlook in national affairs. They constitute three-quarters of the population of the country and it is quite evident that whatever concessions they may be prepared to make to the Moslems, the grant of responsible self-Government is bound to invest them with the chief power in the administration of the country and as a community they are likely to benefit most from this transference of power. Having regard to the treatment accorded to the Moslems during the last four years it can be honestly said that they cannot concede to the Moslems even such a share in the Government of the country as the latter are entitled to in some provinces on the strength of the numbers and in other provinces in order to secure to them a fair representation in the institution of the Government.

In order to deprive us of proper representation the system under which members of each community elect their own representatives to the different Legislative bodies should be put an end to and in its place a system of Joint Electorates should be introduced. On the surface this is a perfectly reasonable proposal and there is no doubt that if the different communities are placed in an almost equal footing in economic and educational matters and could be persuaded to abandon their present attitude of unreasoned bigotry the system of representation advocated by the Hindus would be the only suitable system to be adopted, but the introduction of the system at the present juncture, when the Moslems are not only backward in education but are held in economic slavery by the Hindus and are even unable to organise themselves would be disastrous for the Muslims. Even if a certain number of seats were reserved for the Moslems, the Hindus would be able so as to manipulate the elections as to compel the Muslims debtors to support a Moslem puppet candidate who would be completely subservient to the wishes of the Hindus as against an independent Moslem with the result that the majority of the Moslem representatives would only be the hirelings of the Hindus, and Moslem interest would remain practically unrepresented. These tactics are actually employed in Municipal and District Board elections where there are joint electorates and the Moslems are now sufficiently familiar with their results.

There is another plan adopted by the Hindus. Realising that each community would be able to profit by the grant of self-Government in direct proportion to its members and in order therefore to inflate their numbers they adopted the expedient of what is known as Suddhi Movement. Right from the Orthodox Hindus to the Aryya Samajists joined together for proselytisation. Never before such a movement had its appearance in the Hindu history, but this movement has since four years been launched with the sole object of enhancing their numerical preponderance still further and thus enabling them to monopolise the control of the administration. With such object in view efforts were made to convert by means of persuasion, pressure, bribes, false inducements, and misrepresentation, so that the desired object may be achieved the more speedily. Simultaneously with the campaign the Hindus commenced a campaign of vilification against Islam and its holy founder.

All these are attributable directly to the narrow-minded bigotry which desires to see all political power in the hands of the Hindu communities and to that deplorable mentality which would not rest till it had reduced the Moslim to the abject and mean Sudras. This seeking of a vain desire destroyed the peace of the country, arrested its progress, and filled the hearts of men with ill will and their minds with anxiety. And what an irony of fate is that these Hindus have put all these matters in quite a different light altogether before the English people. They say that the disturbances in India are direct results of the system of communal representation and that the system of the Joint electorate should be abolished. The English people owing to their own national traditions are naturally not prepossessed in favour of this system and the Hindu propaganda has, therefore, achieved a considerable measure of success in at least silently appealing to the Statutory Commission of Sir John Simon to modify the present system in such a manner as to lead to its abolition within a short time.

The Moslems in Bengal and the Punjab are in majority, so their representatives in these provinces must be commensurate with the strength of Moslem population.

Similarly the continuation of the exclusion of the North West Frontier Province from the scope of the Reforms Scheme will have a prejudicial effect on the interests of the Muslims of India as a whole. This question is not one affecting that province alone but concerns the Moslems of India generally.

The only two provinces, out of those included within the operation of the Reform Scheme, in which the Moslems are in a majority in these provinces, are so small that they do not afford any margin for compensating the Hindus for their affording to the Moslems in other provinces representation in excess of the proportion justified by their members. In North West Frontier Province, however, the Hindus can be amply compensated for the concession shown by them to the Moslems in provinces in which the latter are in a majority, without in any way jeopardising the interests of the frontier Moslems themselves, and in this way Moslem interests in Bengal and the Punjab, which are at present in a sense mortgaged in return for concessions granted to the Moslem minority in other provinces, can be redeemed.

Ninety per cent. of the people of Sindh are Moslems and the interests of that province are in no way identical with those of Bombay to which, at present, it is subordinated. It is, therefore, necessary that Sindh should be constituted a separate province.

Again it is imperative for the protection of the Moslem interests that the provinces should be freed from the control of the Central Government in all local and provincial matters. All provincial subjects would be under the complete control of a Legislative Council with ministers in charge of the various departments: and that if India is to remain a unit and not become a disintegrated body of warring elements, a strong, firm, and consolidated Central Government, is essential.

A number of the existing reserved subjects would be made Provincial—all indeed except subjects such as the Police Administration (including Village Administration), Control of the Imperial Services, Jails, Backward tracts, Land Revenue Administration, Borrowing and so forth. These would become Central Subjects such as Defence of India, External Relation, Shipping and Navigation, Major Ports, Posts, Telegraphs and Wireless, Customs, Income Tax, Currency, Savings Banks, Public Debt, Audit Department, Civil Law, Commerce, Geological, Botanical, and Zoological Surveys, Criminal Procedure, Surveys of India, Census, Regulation of Titles, and so forth.

But the Transferred Subjects (from Provincial to Central) are to be under the control of the Governor aided by an Advisory Council—possibly also assisted by a Deputy Governor who could be appointed under the Government of India Act to administer the Frontier areas and the backward tracts of India and Burma. The Government of India Legislatures would of course under this scheme have to be modified in such a way as to ensure that each province was adequately represented by both non-official and official members.

The position and powers of the Governor have on the whole been adequately safeguarded under the Government of India Act, 1919. Much is left to the discretion of the Governor both under the provisions of the Act and of the Rules made under the Act as well as by the instructions to Governors. And it is hoped that a wide discretion (particularly in respect of Central subjects) be retained to the Governor under any revised system. In relation to his Ministers he must be consulted in respect of all appointments of Imperial Service Officers. The outward semblance of a government working in harmony and unity must be maintained.

The Financial position of the country should be most carefully examined. It is Finance that after all determines a Country's prosperity. More and more money will be required for Free Primary Education, Hospitals, Roads, and other similar purposes; and all these depend in the long run for its development in Capital and Labour. Efforts should be made to reduce the overhead Charges of Administration. It would be interesting to see what exactly has been the cost of Reforms in this direction. The Indian Statutory Commission are to bear in mind that Taxation is a heavy burden on many important industries and that the easing of that burden is essential in the interest of India's development as a widening of the franchise or the grant of the increased responsibilities. The members of the Governor's Advisory Council need not be whole time appointments and certainly need not be paid the same salaries as members are at present. The Legislative Council, too, might well be made less of a public charge by increasing the size of constituencies and by reducing the number of Nominated Members with the more efficient administration that might be expected to ensure upon the establishment of a Federalised System of Government, expenditure in other direction might be brought down to a figure which the country would not feel as more than a reasonable charge; for the protection and the amenities it is Government's duty to provide.

Unless consideration is shown in the matter of Financial Settlements and adequate representation, a feeling of bitterness and rancour will be created and will grow and spread, until an act of repression or a curt refusal to a reasonable request produces a state of exacerbated resentment. It is said that Parliament might close its door for a year or two and leave the duty of collecting Taxes and administering the Law to its great body of Civil Servants: but abuses would quickly creep in and the fresh air of criticism would be required to eradicate these and give new life to the machine. A strong Central Executive Authority is required to direct and control the administration and to evolve and state policy. A strong Upper Chamber with extensive powers of control for constituting the Governor and Agent of the Government of India in the discharge of its responsibilities for what are Provincial Subjects, and for making Provincial Legislative Council responsible for the subjects made over to their control, are acts which the Indian Statutory Commission must keep into their view.

The status and position of India in the British Empire is a subject which might exhaust the energies and capacity of one acquainted with the constitutional law of the British Empire. But it can be fairly said that Indians as being a distinct entity in the British Commonwealth of Nations, must have more liberty of action in respect of its power of administration.

Burma's political history is bound up with India's. She cannot be separated from India even to an inch. A well-known Persian Poet says:

(* * * in Persian)

"The rose cannot last long as soon as it is separated from its thorny stem." The Government of India has got to show itself more alive to Burma's interest and more prepared than it has been to listen to the Burma's grievances. Urdu language must be retained in the Burma University course for the respect of the Moslems that live in this country, for the language itself, and for the respect of the Zerbadi Moslems (Burma converted Moslems) of Burma. The Moslems must at all times be left free to obtain and impart instructions in Urdu and facilities must be provided for that purpose. Similarly Urdu language must be retained as the Court language in provinces where this language is current, and it should never be replaced with the Hindu language. The question of language has an important bearing on the progress of Community and should be permitted to fall into the background: and so no change should be introduced in the language of a Province by means of legislation.

It should be made a fundamental part of the Indian constitution that no community shall have the power to restrict the religious freedom of any other community whether directly or in the guise of religious, social, or economic reform; and that the social or economic reform of a community shall rest entirely in the hands of the elected representative of that community. The propagation of religion shall at all times be free from all restrictions and that no direct or indirect limits shall be imposed upon it, for instance, that a change of belief should be evidenced by a declaration made before a magistrate, etc. Such and similar restrictions have in times past been imposed in different countries and there is an apprehension that the Hindus may resort to similar devices in order to check the progress of the Moslems.

In the last the safeguarding of the rights of minorities should be carefully considered by Sir John Simon and the members of his Commission. This question may not be acute amongst more advanced European Nations. In this country parties are at present based largely on religious divisions which are more or less permanent and the result is that a majority will probably continue to be a majority till the latter is able by means of missionary efforts to reduce the majority to a position of minority.

With the above remarks it is earnestly solicited that a careful consideration would be made by Sir John Simon and his worthy co-operators in the formation of an empire on which the destiny of the Moslems rest.

256. The Chairman (Lord Burnham) : Gentlemen, we have the advantage of receiving your Memoranda which we have all gone through carefully. I do not know whether the spokesman of each body would like to make a statement drawing our attention to any particular matter contained in the Memoranda. If Mr. Rahaman is to a certain extent the spokesman of the whole community I might ask him to begin by making any statement he wishes to make. Perhaps I ought to say that the Moslem community here, according to the Memorandum, consists of, firstly, those born in Burma, of Burmese parentage on both sides, popularly known as the Zerbadies; secondly, those born in Burma of mixed Indian and Burmese parentage, also known as Zerbadies; thirdly, those born and domiciled in Burma of Indian parentage on both sides, and fourthly, those born outside Burma and settled down permanently here. According to Part I of the Government Memorandum, page 10*, the number of Muhammadans in this province is 501,000, 4 per cent. in all Burma, 9 per cent. in Urban areas and 3 per cent. in the remainder. Having said that, would you, Mr. Rahaman, like to make a statement on the Memorandum or draw our attention to special points in your Memorandum ?—(Mr. Rahaman) Sir, on behalf of the Moslems of Upper Burma I received a telegram this morning from Mandalay empowering me to speak for them before this Commission. They say that their Memorandum will follow.

The Chairman (Lord Burnham) : I see that you are entitled to speak for the Upper Burma Moslems.

The Witness (Mr. Rahaman) : The main object of our representation is this : We are Burmans in the true sense of the word except in religion. So whatever Reforms the Burmans are going to get, we, as of right, must have a share. But as we are a minority community like the Karens and Anglo-Burmans, we would like to have our interests safeguarded by reserving so many seats as Burma Moslem seats for the time being. The reason why we insist upon having our representation is this. Burmans at present, sir, are asking for Burma for Burmans and not only Burma for Burmans but I feel that they are asking for Burma for Burman Buddhists, thus excluding their Burman Moslems who have no other home except Burma. As I said, sir, we are Burmans in all respects except in religion. We have no other home ; we are born here, we live here and we die here. Our main object is to bring to your notice the existence of this minority community and to guard their interests as inseparable from Burman Buddhists.

257. The Chairman (Lord Burnham) : You are satisfied with the franchise as it exists now ?—We are.

258. In regard to education you claim every facility for higher education, literacy and technical, and adequate representation on educational bodies and the University Council ?—That is so.

259. You demand a fair share in all public departments and services. What percentage do you demand ?—I think according to the population we ought to have at least 10 per cent.

260. What have you to say in regard to separate electorates ?—If seats are reserved for us, I do not mind having a joint electorate.

261. The number of seats ?—10 per cent.

262. Is there any other demand that you would like to put forward ?—I have nothing to add to what is already contained in the Memorandum.

263. Do you wish to say anything, Mr. Mohamed Auzam ?—(Mr. Mohamed Auzam) The relationship between the Hindus and the Muhammadans in Burma has been very cordial and good and the electorate so far has been joint. But now the Muhammadans are asking for separate representation for two reasons. Firstly, they are very backward in education and politically also, and secondly the Burma Moslems for whom my friend has just spoken want to have separate representation. I have included them in my Memorandum. We do not think it would be advisable to have two sets of electorates for the Moslems, one for the Burma Moslems and the other for other Moslems. Therefore we thought it would be better to ask for separate representation for Moslems as a whole.

264. Is there any other point ?—We want a fair share in the various branches of the administration.

265. I see that the Moslem League demand that one-eighth of all grants-in-aid of education should be reserved for their institutions ?—Yes.

266. What is your point about teaching of Urdu ?—They want to abolish that. We say that it must be taught because if we have no Urdu teaching here we will have no religious instructions here.

267. I see you say that " the Deputy Inspectors " support their co-religionists on the need for this " language, one of them on the curious ground that " many Burmese Moslems go on pilgrimage to " Mecca " ?—Yes.

268. Mr. Rafi : Mr. Auzam, is it not a fact that in so far as the municipalities are concerned, the Hindus are separate from the Muhammadans ?—Yes.

269. They have separate electorates ?—Yes.

270. But it is otherwise so far as the Legislative Council is concerned ?—That is so ; we have a joint electorate.

271. Your point is that a common system should be adopted both for the Legislative Council and the Municipalities ; that is to say you want separate electorates for both ?—That is so.

272. You will admit that the relationship between Hindus and Muhammadans in this province has been very cordial ?—Yes.

273. Do I understand you to say that but for the separate representation asked for by the Burma Moslems you would not mind having one common electorate ?—That is so.

274. You have been an old member of the Corporation and also of the Legislative Council for two terms ?—Yes.

275. A question about elections. Is it your experience that there is personation on a large scale ?—Very small ; not worth talking about.

276. Surely a large number of coolies are on the electoral roll, are they not ?—Yes.

277. And a large number of them turn up to vote ?—That is so.

278. I suppose when people see a large number of these coolies at the election booths they run away with the impression that personation is taking place ?—Yes.

279. Is it not a fact that the candidates or their election agents employ a large number of workers ?—They do.

280. They always do see whether personation takes place ?—Yes.

281. And if they come across any case do they not report the instance ?—Yes.

282. Is that your experience also, Mr. Rahaman ?—(Mr. Rahaman) Yes.

283. Is it your experience that although there is no legal bar to the employment of Burma Moslems or Indians in the Government Services, as a matter of fact discrimination is made?—Yes. (Mr. Mahomed Auzam) That is so.

* Vol. XI.

284. Mr. Rahaman, you say in your Memorandum that the Moslem community consists of Moslems "born in Burma of Burmese parentage on both "sides (popularly known as the Zerbadies)." Do you mean born in Burma of Burmese parentage on both sides?—(Mr. Rahaman) Yes.

285. I think there ought to be the word "Moslem" after the word "Burmese" so that it can be clear. I notice that the census shows that the total population of Burma Moslems is about 92,000. Have you any reason to suspect that this figure is not correct?—We cannot vouch for the census figure.

286. Take a concrete case. You have Burma Moslems here who bear Muhammadan names and you have got Burma Moslems who bear Burmese names. When a census officer comes round and asks the Burma Moslem his name, if he says Abdulla he will be classed under the category of Indians, but if he gives his name as Maung Gye he is put in under Zerbadies. In that way, I take it, your population has been brought down to so low a figure as 92,000?—Yes.

287. Otherwise it would have been much more than 92,000?—That is so.

288. Sir Hari Singh Gour: Mr. Mohamed Auzam, you say in your supplementary Memorandum: "We oppose the separation of Burma on whatever "principle the demand may be based as in our "opinion no separate political evolution will hasten "her steps towards the objective nor the false issue "of racial discrimination will help her cause." Will you kindly explain more fully what you mean by that?—(Mr. Mohamed Auzam) We think that if Burma were to work out her own destiny she will have to fight singlehanded, whereas if she remains a part of India, she will get help from India.

289. You fear that if Burma is separated she might be isolated?—Yes.

290. Whereas if she remained joint with India the political strength of India would lend her assistance which she otherwise she could not possess?—Yes.

291. U Ba U: What is your view, Mr. Rahaman?—(Mr. Rahaman) If a majority of Burmese Buddhists here want separation we do not want to stand in their way.

292. Sir Hari Singh Gour: But I see you say: "* * * we venture to submit that separation "of this province from India at the present juncture "will not be to the best interests of Burma"?—Yes.

293. Then you go on to say that if a majority of the Burmese Buddhist community desire separation you would not oppose it. You do not want to stand in the way but all the same you do not approve of it?—Yes.

Mr. Rafi: Provided your interests are safeguarded?

294. Sir Hari Singh Gour: In what way would you like your interests to be safeguarded?—To give our community the same rights and privileges as Burmese and to reserve a certain number of seats.

Memorandum submitted on behalf of the Indian Interests in Burma.

This memorandum is submitted on behalf of the Indian interests in Burma. It is unnecessary for our purpose to trace the origin and growth of the Indian community in Burma. Suffice it to say that the Indian community as a distinct community has come to stay in Burma. In all spheres of activity, social, economic and political, Indians in Burma have been playing a leading part in the development of the province and it is largely due to Indian initiative, enterprise and capital that the province of Burma of to-day has become an important province with its vast stretches of paddy lands and its prosperous and imposing cities. By reason of its leading part in the development of the province and the important rôle which it plays at present in all the progressive activities of the province, the Indian community is entitled to have its interests safeguarded. Indians in Burma have always evinced a keen and active interest in the political progress of Burma and have always loyally co-operated with the indigenous communities in their attempts towards political advancement. Acts and measures prejudicially affecting Indians soon after the reforms and the vigorous agitation carried on of late to prejudice the Indian in the eyes of the people, have not altered in the least the friendly attitude of the Indian community towards Burman political advance. At the same time a feeling of insecurity and lack of confidence in the dominant indigenous community to adequately safeguard Indian interests has been created in the minds of Indians in Burma and we are compelled to ask that necessary safeguards should be embodied in the constitution with a view to create a spirit of goodwill and sympathetic understanding between the two communities which are essential to the political, social and economic progress of the province.

We are aware that the European community as well as a small but vociferous section of the indigenous community is advocating the separation of Burma from British India. We do not feel called upon to express any opinion on the question as the terms of reference to your Commission defining the problems under examination preclude in our humble opinion an enquiry into the question as to the addition to, or diminution of, the territories comprised in British India.

We shall therefore proceed at once to outline the measures and safeguards which should be provided in any constitution framed for Burma.

The Provincial Legislature.

Before the introduction of reforms under the Government of India Act of 1919, the Indian community put forward a claim to representation in the legislature by communal electorates; the grounds which our community urged for a communal electorate have not disappeared; but on the other hand our experience after the reforms has amply demonstrated to us that our interests cannot be adequately safeguarded unless our communal electorates are continued and unless we are accorded better and more adequate representation in the provincial and central legislatures commensurate with our interests and the importance of our community in Burma. Under the present constitution our community enjoys the privilege of sending eight elected representatives to the Provincial Council; four from Rangoon and one each from Mandalay, Bassein, Moulmein and Akyab, besides the two nominated members representing Indian Labour and Indian Chamber of Commerce respectively. In other words, we are given roughly one-tenth of the total number of elected representatives and of those who come in by nomination. According to the 1921 census reports, Indians in Burma number 948,768 out of a total population of about 13,000,000. But by reason of our foremost place in the trade and commerce of the country, our very heavy contribution to the public exchequer, which is out of proportion to our numbers as compared to the other sections of the population, the extent of our property in lands and buildings and the capital sunk and invested in the country, our community is entitled to at least one fifth of the total number of elected representatives in the Council. On the basis of the present number of elected members, in the Provincial Council, we claim that our community should have ten members to be elected from Rangoon, two from Bassein, two from Moulmein, one from Mandalay and one from Akyab, by purely Indian electorate, and this should be coupled with the existing right to compete in other general constituencies. As regards franchise, the present franchise appears to us to be sufficiently wide and there would be no object in disturbing it. Provision, however, should be made to ensure that the electoral roll is prepared with greater care and accuracy and after more careful enquiry. We are strongly of opinion that the definition of " an Indian " as given in schedule 2 of the Burma Electoral Rules (page 243, Burma Legislative Council Manual Part III) should be altered so as not to deprive a person of Indian descent but whose father or grandfather has not been born in India excluding Burma, the right to be qualified for an Indian constituency. If the number of elected seats in the Council be increased, the Indian representation should be increased in the same proportion. We are of opinion that a second chamber is unnecessary in this province as the franchise at present results in the election of a preponderating conservative element in the legislature.

Local Self-Government.

We submit that in the matter of election of our representatives to the Municipalities, communal electorates should be continued where they are in existence. Our members in the Rangoon Municipality and other public bodies should be increased in proportion of the Indian population to the rest of the population in Rangoon, and also in proportion to the Municipal taxes contributed by our community.

Public Services.

All appointments to the public services and to the highest offices in the province should be made purely on considerations of individual merit and efficiency irrespective of race, caste, colour, creed or community. After the introduction of the last reforms, rules were so framed by the local Government as to exclude candidates of our community from competing on an equal basis with other communities for the public services. No rules or restrictions should be imposed so as to exclude the young men of our community who are people of the province from competing on a basis of equality for the Indian Civil Service, the Provincial Civil Service, the subordinate Civil Service, or any other services open to the members of other communities in Burma. In this connection we would also urge that all public and Government-aided educational institutions should be open to students belonging to all communities of this province without any harassing or embarrassing rules of exclusion. Likewise all rules intended to preclude our young men from entering professions for which they are qualified should be abolished.

General Rights.

In the matter of grants and transfer of waste lands available for cultivation concessions or leases to extract timber from Government forests, concessions to work out mines, minerals or quarries, the members of the Indian community in Burma should be placed on the same footing as other communities in Burma. Statutory safeguards should be provided with a view to see that no discriminatory legislation is possible against the Indians or other minor communities in Burma. Provision should be made that no acts be passed or measures taken by the Government to create any disability as against the minor communities. It is noticeable that since the introduction of the reformed constitution in Burma the term "domicile" has been very much requisitioned in the various acts, rules and regulations of the Government of Burma. The term has been used very loosely and has in fact been very much abused, resulting in very serious hardships to the members of our community. We submit the term is misapplied when used with reference to the people of one province of a sovereign state residing in a different province of the same sovereign state. If it is found that the term "domicile" can be so applied, we suggest that the term may be defined with a view to avoid ambiguity and unnecessary hardship to the Indian and other non-indigenous communities residing in Burma.

CENTRAL LEGISLATURE.

We consider that besides the member elected by the European Constituency, Burma should be represented on the basis of its present strength in the Assembly by nine members. We suggest that the present qualification of voters may be retained, but that two out of the nine seats may be reserved for an Indian constituency. It may be urged that an Indian constituency for the Central Legislature is unnecessary in view of the large number of Indians in the Legislative Assembly returned by the other Provinces. It is submitted, however, that with a view to safeguarding the interests of Indians in Burma who have peculiar problems of their own, it is necessary that men with local knowledge of Burma should be sent to the Assembly, as their duties and functions cannot be assigned to representatives from other provinces. If the number of elected members in the Assembly is increased the number of nine seats allotted to Burma should also be proportionately increased.

COUNCIL OF STATE.

It is submitted that the qualification of voters should be the same as at present. On the basis of the present strength of the Council of State, the provision of only one seat for the general constituency is wholly inadequate when the importance of the province is taken into account. We suggest at least three representatives should be allowed to be returned to the Council of State, two by the Burma general constituency and one by the Indian electorate. We claim three seats for Burma on the basis of the present strength, but if the elected element in the Council be increased, Burma's share of representation should be increased in the same proportion.

SUPPLEMENTARY MEMORANDUM SUBMITTED ON BEHALF OF THE INDIAN INTERESTS IN BURMA.

We have already submitted that, having regard to the terms of reference, your Commission, in our humble opinion is precluded from examining the question of separation of Burma from India, as the inquiry as to what territories shall be comprised in British India is beyond the scope of reference. If, however, it is held that our submission is erroneous and that you are justified in going into the question whether Burma should be separated from British India, our community as an integral part of the population of Burma is entitled to be heard on the question.

So far as we are able to gather, the grounds of the separationists are fourfold, viz. (1) excessive financial contribution in the shape of central heads of revenue (2) drain from the country to India by exploitation by Indians (3) fear of the country being swamped by Indians and (4) sentiment and prejudice. We shall deal with these arguments as briefly as possible.

FINANCIAL LOSS UNDER THE CENTRAL HEADS OF REVENUE.

There appears to be a mistaken belief that Burma is financially milched by India. The spread of this belief is due in large measure to the incorrect data and inaccurate financial statements laid by the Local Government on the table of the Provincial Legislature on the 31st January, 1927, in the course of which they say: "The statement shows that the central receipts from Burma in 1923–1924 amounted in round figures to Rs. 9.76 crores and the expenditure to Rs. 2.75 crores or 26 per cent. of the receipts." Another statement (copy attached* showing the central receipts and central expenditure for the rest of India during the same year) indicates that the expenditure amounted to sixty-four per cent. of the receipts. The Accountant-General, Burma, pointed out the inaccuracies and stated: "If the corrections suggested above are made and military receipts and charges (including marine and military works) are excluded, the percentage of central expenditure in Burma comes to fourteen against fifteen for the rest of India. The actuals under the head 19, interest on ordinary debt in statement A, do not represent the expenditure incurred on account of Burma as Burma's share of the debt and annual liability on account of interest are required to be calculated on a different basis. If this expenditure is excluded from statements A and B the percentage of central expenditure comes to ten both for Burma and for the rest of India." The Government of India was not prepared to endorse the accuracy of the Local Government's statements. If there is really any adjustment necessary to relieve Burma of any excessive contribution to the central Exchequer your Commission can make a more equitable adjustment, but there is nothing in this to require the separation of Burma from India.

There is the other question whether the cost of administration of Burma would be cheaper if Burma were to cut away from India. Separated, Burma would then retain the revenues now going into the Central Exchequer, but she would have to expend not only the amount spent in Burma under Central heads, but also further large amounts under the various heads of expenditure which are incurred by India from the Central Revenues for the upkeep of all the departments which are maintained by India for and on behalf of all the provinces including Burma. The most important item under this head would be the army and navy, including marine and military works. The military charges which Burma would have to bear in such case is not to be arrived at by dividing the military expenditure of India, pro-rata, among the provinces composing British India. The Government of India spends about 55 crores of rupees on the army, and even on a division on the pro rata basis between the nine provinces of India, Burma's share would come to roughly 6.1 crores. The military charges of a State depend largely on the nature and extent of the country and its geographical situation. Burma has a very large coast line and a long land frontier, extending nearly a thousand miles, touching the borders of China, Siam and French Indo-China. China, under changed conditions, is a potential factor, and has assumed a much greater importance than ever before. If India has an expensive North Western problem, Burma has, or is likely to have in the near future, a North Eastern Frontier problem of equal importance which will have to be boldly faced. As to the size of the country, of all the provinces of India, Burma has the largest area. Burma has 233,707 square miles, while Madras, the next largest province of India, has an area of only 142,260 square miles. Burma is thus by far the largest province in India with the largest land frontier and sea coast and with only a small comparative population of 13,212,192. Of the major provinces Burma has thus a singularly small population to defend her frontier. Burma offers a poor field for recruitment for the army and the Burman element in Burma's army is likely to be so very small as to be almost negligible for a considerable time to come. In the absence of an element corresponding to sepoys of the Indian Army, Burma should necessarily have recourse to the maintenance of an army composed almost wholly of the British element. It is a proved fact that the British soldier costs nearly five times as much as the Indian soldier. For a thoroughly efficient mechanised army for Burma, with all the paraphernalia of modern military equipments, the military estimate would be easily double the quota arrived at by a pro rata division of the military expenditure among the several provinces. The military expenditure would be not less than 10 crores at a modest estimate and this would consume the whole of the revenues derived from the Central heads.

Then coming to the expenditure under the Central heads the Government of India says: "It is extremely difficult to allocate to Burma and to the other provinces a proper share of home transactions and also of transactions relating to the main commercial department, namely, the Railways and the Post and Telegraphs. Generally speaking, the accounts of the Central Government follow the place of receipt or payment, rather than the province to which the receipt of payment properly appertains, etc."

Under the heads of Ports and Pilotage the receipts of the Central Government is shown as Rs. 6,31,600/–, and expenses by the same Government as Rs. 4,06.442/– for Burma. In these expenses the capital expenditure, depreciation, overhead charges and interest are not taken into account. In the same way under the Posts and Telegraphs the gross receipts are shown as Rs. 70,63,500, with working expenses of Rs. 42,43,700, showing a balance of Rs. 28,19,800. It may be remarked that the Post and Telegraph Department is beginning to pay its way in India and showing a small profit. In Burma with vast tracts of land practically uninhabited, over which the telegraph lines are run, it is impossible for the telegraphs to pay their own way. On the other hand, the profits on the postal side would be swallowed up by telegraphs and this Department of Post and Telegraphs would be worked only at a loss.

Burma has got a large programme of capital expenditure. We think we would not be far wide of the mark when we say that only a negligible percentage of the borrowings can be raised internally from Burma. A separated Burma, without the financial backing of India will never be able to borrow at rates bordering on the rates prevailing now, except in the improbable contingency of the Home Government offering to back up the loans. These circumstances will add considerably to the debt charges.

REPAYMENT OF BURMA'S SHARE OF PUBLIC DEBT.

If Burma were to separate from India a final settlement of account will have to be made. The famous debates on the subject of financial arrangements between India and Burma, between the late Mr. Gokhale and Mr. Gates in 1911–1912, are interesting reading. Mr. Gokhale has showed that India had paid heavily for the Burmese War, which cost more than 10 crores, and later on, India had to pay for the development of Burma, costing about 50 to 60 crores. Since 1911–12 it is difficult to say what amounts have been spent by India on Burma, or what share of the burden incurred by India should be debited to Burma. The fact remains that the items of debit on this score would be considerable. The expenditure on this head would be heavy and can only be met by borrowing at a high rate of interest.

The foregoing considerations are matters of serious importance and demand closest attention. It seems to us that on financial grounds the separation of Burma from India is impracticable.

SUPPOSED DRAIN FROM THIS COUNTRY TO INDIA DUE TO EXPLOITATION BY INDIANS.

It is fallacy to say that there is any appreciable drain from this country to India. It is a well-known fact that the money earned by Indians is mostly kept in Burma, and in the case of the vast majority of them the savings from wages and profits from legitimate trades are retained in Burma, and most of the investments are in the shape of immovable property. The bulk of the liquid cash owned by the Chettyars and others is kept in Burma and not in India. The properties and investments are tangible and visible. There are, roughly speaking, 4 classes of Indians in Burma, viz. :—Chettyars, the Suratees and Memons, the Chulias, and the Indian labourers. The small class of Indians in public service and in the learned professions and other allied avocations, may be left out of account for the present purpose, as it is well known that they as a class spend most of their earnings, and their savings are so small as to be almost negligible in a comprehensive survey of the supposed drain. As regards the Chettyars, they believe in extending their business in Burma and their remittances to India are considerably less than their remittances from India to this country. Incidentally in the course of business they are compelled to own landed property taken over in satisfaction of debts owing to their debtors' default, but no figures are available as to what small proportion of the cultivable area is in their occupation. It is well known that but for the enterprise and the heavy risks undertaken by this class of bankers it would have been impossible to open up the country or bring extensive areas under cultivation. The Banking concerns carrying on business on European lines do not care to run the risk of advancing money to indigenous cultivators and traders; and it is left to the Chettyars to undertake the financing of such classes, dealings with whom are naturally a source of heavy risks. Besides the Chettyars, there is a small class of Marwaris and Multanese doing banking business, but they are confined practically to the larger towns. So far as banking business is concerned the Indian Banker is the financial backbone of the people and is held by them in high esteem. His rate of interest is uniform for all communities and he makes no distinctions of race, creed or colour. The Burmese bankers are far from popular, owing to their higher rates of interest and their methods of business. The allegation that the Chettyars are usurious and harmful to the interests of the Burmans is wholly unfounded. It may be pointed out that the highest officials who are in the position of detached spectators have paid well-deserved tributes to the enterprise of the Chettyars and the immense services rendered by them to Burma. Sir Harcourt Butler, the last Governor of Burma, said to the Chettyars in one of his public speeches, "I value your good work. You represent a very important factor indeed in the life of the province. As a class, moneylenders come in for a good deal of criticism, but they have always been an absolutely essential part in the economic growth of any country. When the banker has to call the law into his assistance he is often unfairly criticised, and the vast amount of really good work that he is doing is often lost sight of. You, Gentlemen, have gradually and carefully built up a remarkable system of banking throughout the province, the ramifications of which are known to very few except those who have taken the trouble to make a real study of the question. Without the assistance of the Chettyar banking system Burma would never have achieved the wonderful advance of the last 25–30 years. The Chettyars provide the necessary finance to the agriculturists in practically every village throughout the province, and while enabling the Burman greatly to increase his production, they have at the same time undoubtedly inculcated ideas of thrift and economy by their insistence on regular repayments as regards both principal and interest. The Burman to-day is a much wealthier man than he was 25 years ago and for this state of affairs the Chettyar deserves his share of thanks. Your interest in the province and your desire to help it forward has often been shown by your public-spirited actions. Those who know you best and whose dealings bring them into daily contact with you have told me how deeply they appreciate your high standard of integrity and I feel confident that whatever future developments of banking may do for Burma, the Chettyar will always hold his own and prove himself in the years to come, as he has done in the past, the real backbone of the banking system throughout the province." Little need be added by us to such eulogy. For a long time to come the Co-operative Credit Societies and the Land Mortgage Banks which are to be established cannot, in the very nature of things, replace to any extent the Chettyar element. It is undeniable that only a third or fourth of the culturable lands in the province has been brought under cultivation and the Chettyars, far from being harmful, are indispensable to the prosperous development of the country. But we must remember that if their risks and their difficulties are increased and a feeling of insecurity is created in the event of separation, they would naturally endeavour to contract their business activities and convert their investments into liquid capital and transfer it to India. There is danger of a drain only in the event of separation of Burma from India.

It is well known that the Muhammadans as a class are noted for investing all their wealth in immovable properties. They have not shown so far any tendencies to transfer their earnings from Burma and are not likely to do so in the future, unless compelled by such drastic change in the constitution as to create a sense of insecurity in Burma.

The Chulias are, as a class, petty-traders all over Burma, and some of them do considerable business in the important towns. Their earnings are small and any savings they may have are re-invested in trade.

Far from being a source of drain, the Indian community has been gradually bringing into Burma the proceeds of the conversion of their available property in India, feeling that it is better to have all their belongings in the country of their adoption rather than leave their properties in India to the tender mercies of their friends and relations.

It is true that the labourers send a small part of their earnings to their wives and children in India, but Burma requires Indian labour just as India requires Burma rice or timber. Just as India pays for Burma rice or timber, Burma pays India for Indian labour. In recent years Burmans have been doing work commonly regarded as characteristically Indian, such as forming large reaping gangs, employment in railway construction (for example in the Moulmein-Ye construction which was carried out purely by Burmese labour) working up barges to transport rice, harvest, etc. As stated in the census report of 1921, it may be expected, that, during the next decade, Indian immigrants will find it more difficult to meet the competition of Buddhists of the most vigorous age, 20 to 35. In short, Indian labour neither ousts Burman labour nor unfairly competes with it. The Indian labourer is indispensable to Burma because there are certain types of work which Burma labour will never consent to undertake, and other types of work for which it is neither fitted nor available in time. If Burma desires to stop Indian labour the Indian community will criticise the desire only from the point of view of the requirements of labour in the country and not because it is Indian labour that is proposed to be stopped. The Indian labourer cannot be easily replaced by indigenous or other labour and a certain amount of drain is therefore inevitable. It must be noted that the drain under this head is very small when compared to the lasting benefits conferred on the country, resulting in an enormous increase in the productive capacity of the country which more than counterbalances the small drain incidental to the employment of Indian labour.

THE FEAR OF BEING SWAMPED BY INDIANS.

The cry is frequently raised in interested quarters that the Indian is rapidly replacing the Burman. This cry is encouraged now and then by the utterances of responsible high officials and others, that on account of the competition from the industrious Chinamen and equally industrious Indians, there is a grave danger that Burmans will lose their distinctive individual national characteristics. The authors of the Census Report of 1921 have made a fairly impartial and comprehensive survey of the situation. We agree with the Census Reports in their statements that this cry is due :—

(1) to the large number of Indians who can be seen landing from the ships that come to Rangoon from India.
(2) to the fact that the Indian population is concentrated in parts in which its presence was particularly noticed by European observers who first raised the cry.
(3) to the fact that about one-third derive their livelihood from cultivation.
(4) to the fact that the bulk of them are engaged in occupations classed as industry, transport and trade, etc.
(5) to the fact that consequently they are either in towns or close beside the railway or river routes.
(6) to the fact that it is true even in the districts in which the Indians are proportionately numerous, and it is exactly such a location as must make them be seen most frequently by observers.

It will be seen from the Census Reports, that the share of Indians in transport and some other industries is exaggerated in the occupational tables, that they have not such a monopoly in skilled occupations and industrial establishments as is sometimes suggested.

In certain places, some areas of paddy land have been legitimately acquired by Indians or are worked by Indians, but such areas are proportionately very small and the problems involved are local.

In the distant districts the population of Indians according to the census is only 1 in 18 of population. The Indian population in Burma has grown by about 10 per cent. in the last decade, instead of 18 per cent. shown by the preceding decade.

The question then arises as to whether the immigrant population is likely to displace the indigenous population. This would depend largely upon the number of immigrant women who come to settle in the country. It is well known that the percentage of women immigrants is very small when compared to the immigrant males. The last census has shown that during the previous decade the increase in the female population was only 2.5 per cent. in 1921 as against the increase of 1.9 in 1901, and that in the distant districts less than half the Indian female population of 1921 were born in India. As is pointed out very rightly in the Census Reports, a single homogeneous immigrant race is far more likely to be absorbed into the indigenous race than to dispossess that indigenous community. The Indians in Burma are far from being an indigenous race. The conclusions taken from the Census Reports give a direct contradiction to the cry that the Indians are likely to displace the indigenous races in Burma.

The common view that the Burmese are in danger of losing their country to the Indians is not new but goes back at least 800 years. It is not unreasonable to ask for special evidence that a dispossession which went so slowly through these centuries when the indigenous races were absorbed in internecine wars, is going to have serious effect now. To a nation alive to conditions the present number of Indians and their rate of increase offer no menace, while the Indians may come to Burma for the advantage both of themselves and of Burma, and there are at present no signs that they will within reasonable time dispossess the Burmans and convert Burma into an Indian country.

"Those who come only for a short time cannot do this; those who stay will tend to be absorbed as they are being absored now. By their absorption they will, of course, influence Burmese development, as they have always done, but the essential character of the community must remain Burmese."

It is, therefore, perfectly clear that the fear of being swamped by Indians is wholly unfounded, and the cry raised is wholly mischievous and detrimental to the best interests of the country.

In this connection it may be pointed out that the increase in the population during the decade preceding 1921 was only 1,74,471. There is absolutely no foundation for the fear of hordes of Indians rushing up to settle in the country. The following table will be of interest in this connection.

During the period (1918 to 1927) the total balance of immigrants over emigrants from all places outside Burma was 6,57,413, or an average of 65,781 per annum. It is well known that during this period there has been a considerable increase of immigrants from China and other places. The balance of immigrants over emigrants cannot be arrived at by deducting the number of emigrants from the number of immigrants as was done in arriving at the above figures of 6,57,413, as it is well known that a fair proportion of the immigrant population go a number of times in the course of a particular period for a short visit outside Burma and return again to this country. These figures clearly indicate that the fear of the character of the population being changed by immigration from India is a myth.

It is true that of late there has been a steadily growing pressure of the increasing population of Burma on the means of subsistence. The low economic conditions of the province are due to causes which are world-wide, due to post-war conditions and the inability of the vast bulk of the people to adapt themselves to the ever-changing conditions. The Indians have no special advantage in this province in any walk of life, and if the Burman takes life more seriously and becomes less inactive and exerts himself, he can replace the Indian trader and worker in many profitable avocations, and of late a welcome change is discernible in this direction. There is no doubt a tendency on the part of the Burman to ascribe his low economic condition to the presence of the Indian in Burma. The Burmans were accustomed to a free and easy life. People with educational qualifications were very few and they were easily absorbed by the ever-increasing demand in the public services. The Burmans have taken to higher education in ever increasing numbers and there is a large surplus over and above the requirements of the public services. Their education, as in the case of the rest of India, unfits them for a commercial career. Refusing to recognise the real cause, Burmans naturally attribute all their ills to the presence of the Indians in the province. But a little reflection and a closer examination of facts will disclose to them the error of their conclusions and will show them that the cause and the remedy for their ills lie in their own hands.

SENTIMENT AND PREJUDICE.

There is a common belief that the Indians were responsible for Burma's loss of liberty. Whatever part the Indians have taken in the subjugation of Burma was not due to the desire of the Indians. The Indian people and the national organisations vehemently opposed the Burmese wars and this should be clearly understood by the Burmese people. Burmans seem to think that it is possible to eliminate the Indian community from Burma by discriminatory laws and by adopting methods of expropriation of Indians in Burma. They are slow to recognise the fact that even in a separated Burma the British Parliament will provide statutory safeguards against any such legislation or measures. In other colonies like British Malaya and Ceylon the Indians have a large stake, are found in sufficiently large numbers and enjoy full rights, and in a separated Burma the Indian community will, as a matter of course, continue as a permanent factor even if Burma were separated from India. If this cardinal principle is brought home to the Burman, the cry of the small but vociferous section of the Burmese community against the Indian community will die a natural death.

It is suggested in some quarters that Burma may be separated from India for all practical purposes and may be placed directly under the Secretary of State for India, so that technically Burma may be a part of British India while having nothing to do with the Central Legislature or the Central Government for the rest of India which is under the Viceroy and Governor-General. This would give all the advantages of separation while imposing none of the obligations consequent upon separation. The party most concerned in such arrangement would naturally be India, and it is impossible to arrive at any decision on this question without ascertaining the views of India, and so far none of the witnesses in India have been examined on this point. It seems to us only too obvious that India will resolutely object to assume the invidious rôle thus offered to her. We shall, however, indicate our objection purely from the provincial outlook. All the powers of Central Legislature and the Central Government cannot in the very nature of things be distributed between the Government of Burma (including the Provincial Legislature) and the Secretary of State. There will still have to be central subjects common to Burma and the rest of India. There would be a central legislature and Burma and the rest of India would have an executive. This central legislature and the central executive should be located somewhere in British India, nay, they would be located in the main continent of India as the balance of convenience would be in favour of locating them at a place nearest to the largest number of provinces of India, though it may mean inconvenience to a single province. The other provinces of India would be entitled to send their quota of representatives to the Central Legislature so constituted; and such being the obvious arrangement, we fail to appreciate what advantages can accrue to Burma from it. If it is suggested that there ought to be a central legislature and central executive for India excluding Burma and another central legislature and central executive for the whole of British India and Burma, the proposal has merely to be stated to be rejected as an absurd duplication of the machinery of Government. If on the other hand it is suggested that all the powers now exercised by the central Government should be transferred to Whitehall, it will be going back on the pledged word of British Parliament contained in the declaration of August, 1917, and we as a community interested in conserving our popular powers in the matter of central subjects and in improving upon them would be justified in opposing such proposals to the interest in our power.

A suggestion is also made that in the event of separation, an arrangement can be made with India, by the payment of subsidy or otherwise, to maintain a reserve or to help Burma with the Indian Army when a contingency arises. India has been resisting all attempts to use the Indian army for Imperial purposes. India will not hear of any such proposal as the Indians will not be prepared to sell the life blood of their nationals for mercenary considerations.

It is suggested that in any constitution for Burma that may be proposed by your committee, the definition of "citizen" and "fundamental" rights should be the same as those incorporated in the proposed Indian Scheme for Dominion status as passed by the All Parties Convention in Calcutta in the supplementaty report, vide chapter IV., pp. 31, 32, 33.

We are of the opinion that the proposal for separation and the alternative proposals and the implications which follow are impracticable and should not be entertained. We regret to say that they are made without regard to facts and figures and without consideration for other peoples' legitimate rights. They can have no other result except the straining of the feeling of amity and goodwill which Indians have always fostered towards Burmans. We trust that in any such scheme of reform which may be introduced for Burma full and sufficient safeguards will be prominently introduced so that the minority community of Indians with large and permanent interests in the province may be adequately protected and that they may enjoy unfettered full and complete and equal rights with the indigenous Burman community.

RANGOON.

Morning.

PRESENT :

ALL THE MEMBERS OF THE COMMISSION, OF THE CENTRAL COMMITTEE (EXCEPT MR. KIKABHAI PREMCHAND) AND OF THE BURMA PROVINCIAL COMMITTEE.

Deputation of Representatives of Indian Interests in Burma.

The deputation consisted of :—

Mr. N. M. COWASJEE, M.L.C., Indian Chamber of Commerce.
Hon. Mr. P. C. D. CHARI, M.C.S.
Mr. K. B. CHANDOO.
Mr. V. DAYA.
Mr. N. AYMER (for Raja Ramanatha Reddiar, LL.D.).

1. The Chairman : We have your Memorandum, gentlemen, and we realise that those on whose behalf you speak would be opposed to separation, and would bring before us a number of points in support of that view ; and that in the second place you ask for certain special provisions, safeguards, wanting, I think, an increase of the nine elected Indian representatives of the Burma Council to 16 ?—(Mr. Chari) : Yes.

2. * * * (Mr. Cowasjee) : Two from Bassein, one from Mandalay, two from Moulmein and one from Akyab, besides ten from Rangoon.

3. And you want to increase the total Burman representation in the Legislative Assembly from 3 to 9, as well as the European constituencies ?—Yes.

4. What do you want to do, Mr. Chari, about the Council of State ? This is interesting.—(Mr. Chari) : We want one out of three. We want three for the whole of Burma.

5. Then you want to introduce a communal element into all these different representations, do you ?—Yes.

6. And apparently you are opposed to an extension of the franchise ?—That the present franchise may be continued.

7. I think I see the main point. Is there anything you would like to say about it ? I dare say one or two of my colleagues would like to put questions to you.—What we have to state we have stated in brief in the Memorandum, but if any questions are asked I am prepared to answer them.

8. Mr. Cadogan : I put a question a few days ago on the subject of the opinion of the Indian community as regards separation of Burma from India, and I was told that those Indians who lived in Burma were in favour of the separation, and that it is only those birds of passage who raise any objection.—(Mr. Cowasjee) : That is not so. It cannot be so, because I have lived in Burma ; I was born in Burma and I am opposed to separation. (Mr. Chari) : And in fact many of the signatories of this Memorandum have been long residents here.

9. You say those who live in Burma are opposed to separation. Is that so ? You think that is the general feeling ?—The Indians as a class are opposed to separation, and most of the Burmese also are opposed to separation. The vast majority of them are opposed to separation.

10. Do you think that Indian labour supplements or supplants Burman labour ?—Supplements it.

11. Then on page 443 of your Memorandum, under the heading Public Services, the second sentence is this : " After the introduction of the last Reforms, " rules were so framed by the local Government as " to exclude candidates of our community from " competing on an equal basis with other communities " for the public services." Then a little lower down you say : " We would also urge that all public and " Government aided educational institutions should " be open to students belonging to all communities " of this province without any harassing or embarras- " sing rules of exclusion." What are those harassing or embarrassing rules of exclusion ? With regard to the services, cannot you compete on an equal basis ?—We can, but we have got our own educational institutions, which are recognised by the Government, and our people are properly qualified, in fact they are better qualified than other people generally for the Government service ; but members of our community are excluded by a rule which insists upon a Burmese language test of a high standard, which our educational institutions do not provide. I agree that they should, no doubt, be required to pass a language test after entering the service, as, for instance, in the case of the Indian Civil Service, where they have to pass a vernacular test in the province to which they are posted, but in the case of Indians they are asked to produce proof that they have a good knowledge of Burmese, as it is called, without defining what a good knowledge is, and they are practically excluded from offering themselves for recruitment, and then domicile is always insisted upon. Of course, we have no objection to domicile, provided it is not vague and indefinite.

12. You do not attach conditions ?—No, we say that the domicile of a particular province has no meaning in constitutional law. I am only a humble person giving evidence before an eminent jurist, but my own view is that domicile in a particular province of a sovereign State has no meaning at all, because if this process were extended it would mean that a man might be required to prove domicile in a particular district or township. So far as the Indians are concerned, we say there ought to be no distinction on the ground of domicile with reference to a particular province of India.

13. Mr. Campagnac : On what do you base the assertion that the vast majority of Burmese oppose separation ?

The Chairman : What page is this ?

Mr. Campagnac : He just gave that answer.—There are various parties in Burma. Of course, the most influential party is the General Council of Burmese Associations. They have a very good organisation, and in the report made by the local Government about the various parties and their influence, after the Reformed Constitution was introduced, it is stated that the General Council of Burmese Associations has got the predominating influence in politics, and it is generally followed by the people at large. They are against separation. There is the Hundred Committee, which has been formed on a very democratic basis, and they have stated in unmistakable terms that it is to the best interests of Burma to be linked with India. Apart from that, there is the Parliamentary Party, which was recently formed. They are also opposed to separation.

14. Sir Hari Singh Gour : In the council ?—In the council, yes. Then the People's Party as a party is opposed to separation. There is the Independent Party and their followers. I do not know how far they are in favour of separation ; I think some of them are for and some against separation ; but the only party so far that is in favour of separation is the recently formed Separation League. We have got figures that it comprised only 4,000 members on the 5th January, 1929, mostly youngsters. It is a recently formed Association, and they are voicing this question of separation and agitating for it. Apart from it, there are only small communities in favour of separation. I find that the Anglo-Indian community has no objection to separation. Of course, they support the separation theory also, they are only a small section of the people, and I am not so sure whether the whole community is in favour of separation. I have heard views from some people who are not in favour of separation.

15. Mr. Campagnac : You spoke about the Parliamentary Party. That consists of about four or five members, does it not ?—It is a distinct party with followers in the country ; but the dominating party is the General Council of the Burmese Association.

16. You know that they originally passed a resolution in favour of separation ; it was construed as such by the Government, and debated as such ?—You mean the resolution passed on 31st January, 1927.

17. Mr. Rafi : 1924. The mover declined to say whether it was a separation resolution or not.—The Government interpreted it as a separation resolution, but the mover did not refer to it as such. He only wanted a proper financial adjustment ; that is how I take it.

18. Mr. Campagnac : Would I not be correct in saying that the majority of Burmans are in favour of separation, but some of them are not in favour of immediate separation ?—The only people who are in favour of separation are members of the Separation League, plus the Anglo-Indian community. The rest are decidedly in favour of being linked up with India, and some of them want to reconsider this question only after Dominion status is achieved for the whole of India.

19. The Chairman : Might I ask, for the purposes of information, two questions. Has any resolution been passed in the Burma Council, either this present one or the previous one or the one before that, affirming that the view of the majority of the council was that there should not be separation ?—There was no resolution either way.

20. Perhaps you did not hear my question ; it was carefully framed. What I wanted to know was whether there has been any resolution passed in any of the Burma councils to the effect that the majority of the council was opposed to separation ?—So far as I know there was no such resolution.

21. Now, if you are right when you say that there is unquestionably this large majority of politically-minded Burmans who are opposed to separation, how does it come about that nobody, with all this discussion going on, has ever proposed and carried such a resolution ?—The resolution ought to be the other way.

22. I know ; but one would like to see it put to the test. Do you think that if somebody in this present council, one of your own community, perhaps, was to move that in the opinion of this council there should be no separation of Burma from India, are you expressing a confident view that that resolution would be carried by a large majority ? Is that your view ?—Yes ; but then, apart from it, if it has been raised as an election issue then the indication would be quite clear ; but even apart from it, I have no doubt that the council as a whole would be opposed to separation.

23. What I feel about it is this. We are anxious to learn, but after all, it is very difficult to be sure, because of the different opinions expressed. Nobody really can assert, as though it was a matter of proved fact, that a majority of opinion is so and so, unless it is brought to the test ?—But we people who live in the country have got means of ascertaining——

24. But, you see, we have had other people who live in the country, who have given us exactly the other view. I am not in the least arguing either one view or the other ; but you will agree that it is not very satisfactory to have it in that form.—But then the proper thing would——

26. Mr. Rafi : Is it not a fact that most of the non-separationists are boycotters ?—(Mr. Chari) Yes, that is the real difficulty.

The Chairman : As far as I remember, all the deputations we have had from Burmese on this subject have been in favour of separation. It is striking.

Mr. Campagnac : May I put one more question on this point ?

27. The Chairman : The Karens were in favour of separation. I do not recollect any deputation of Burmese who were opposed to separation.—(Mr. Cowasjee) : We have the other section, a very large section which is not represented here. That is the trouble. (Mr. Chari) : In fact, at page 325 of the report on the working of the reformed constitution, a report submitted by the Government of Burma to the Government of India, I find this statement is made : " In 1921 the General Council of Burmese Associations dominated all political activity," and then it goes on and gives the various organisations connected with it, and even to-day it is dominating the Burmese political activity, and then they have a firm hold on the masses. It has not been disputed that the followers of this party would form more than 90 per cent. of the population.

28. The Chairman : It must be a most hopeless thing for anybody who oppose them if 90 per cent. support one party.—In fact they are boycotters. Their views can only be gathered from what appears in the press, and from the resolutions that have been passed.

The Chairman : We shall do our best to listen to the evidence that is put before us. May I just look at that book to follow the page ? (Book handed to the Chairman).

Mr. Campagnac : Are you aware that Maung Poo, in a speech in the Legislative Council—he is the leader of the People's Party, or was the leader ; he is now the president of the Legislative Council—said this : " We are all unanimous that one day Burma must " be separated from India."—One day, of course.

30. And then he went on to say : " It has been " suggested to me that this resolution has not been " supported by the bulk of the people in Burma. It "is not so. It is the same resolution as was passed, "if I remember aright, on the 8th February, 1921, "after my second deputation to England. At the "mass meeting at Jubilee Hall, which was overflowing, "we decided on almost identical lines, and therefore, "in spite of the telegram from the * * * "Camp to the Government of India (probably it "was done out of spite), I can assure the honourable "member that this resolution is the unanimous "opinion of the Burmese population." I suppose Maung Poo is a man with a considerable following in Burma?—He has got some following. You will find from the reports published by the local Government it is stated that Maung Poo lost his following and could not get returned to the council after the statement you have read out was made. That had a considerable bearing on his election. Perhaps he was rejected for that.

31. U Ba U: But he has been in the council three times. He has been successful throughout?—Now, of course. In his Council speech he refers to events before the Whyte Committee, and before the Reforms were introduced here. The local Government says he lost influence; in fact he had no influence at all. That is what is stated in the book I have just handed in.

32. The Chairman: I am obliged to you for letting me look at this book, the report on the working of the Reformed Constitution. The report was made in 1927, and the passage you read to us is on page 325, and refers, as a matter of history, to something in 1921?—Yes.

33. It is contrasting the position in 1921 with the change which took place after 1921. The sentence you read is this: "In 1921 the General Council of "Burmese Associations dominated all Burmese "political activity," and they go on to describe a boycott which was specially directed against persons taking part in the reception of the Prince of Wales, and so forth, and then they go on to say that there was a seceding party from this General Council of Burmese Associations, and it mentions several distinguished names. It describes this seceding party as becoming the Moderate Party.

34. And they go on to describe how these people formed a Moderate Party, became a very important element, two of their members having an official position. They became pledged to a definite policy of co-operation. They trace the story, the results of the 1925 election showing that the Nationalist Party had become unpopular, and so on. I hardly think, Mr. Chari, that one could take that half sentence on this page, which refers to a position in 1921, in support of the view that here in 1929, or in the last year or two, this body is the most important political body.—It goes on to describe the seceders, and I find in a later place that these people who seceded had very little hold on the people afterwards.

35. I am much obliged to you. Is there anything at all in this book, one way or the other, on the subject of popular opinion in Burma as regards separation?—There is nothing so far as I know. That shows the feeling was not strong, and they did not think it necessary to include this aspect of it in the report.

36. The inference we will draw for ourselves. I wanted to know the fact. As far as you know, is there anything in the volume about it?—Not as far as I recollect.

37. U Ba Shin: Your community will not be unwilling to recommend a form of government that will content the people of Burma provided your community interests are safeguarded?—Most certainly, of course. We are interested in Burma's political advance quite as much as any Burman here.

38. And if these safeguards are provided in the constitution, you will not be opposing the separation which the Burman claims?—We oppose separation, as you will find from the Memorandum, not because we are afraid of our own position, but in the interests of Burma we are opposing separation. We think Burma would suffer financially and in other ways, as indicated in my Memorandum. In fact we are opposed to separation not because we stand to suffer, as our interests can be safeguarded in a constitution framed after separation, but I am only concerned with the larger interests of Burma.

39. You have never been elected as a member of the local legislative council?—I have never stood for it. I stood for the Council of State, and I got elected.

40. And you got elected because no Burman opposed you?—There was a Burman candidate, no doubt, and he was there till the time the voting cards were being issued. He was eliminated only at the time of the issue of the voting cards; in fact, whoever came to work for him worked for the rival candidate, because the gentlemen who worked for the Burman candidate thought I was responsible for his being disqualified. So as a matter of fact there was a Burmese opposition, and I got returned through the Burmese votes.

41. U Ba Shin: Am I correct in understanding that you got the support of the Burmese in your election to the Council of State?—(Mr. Chari): Yes, also the support of Indians and Europeans. In the general constituency there is a large proportion of Burmans.

You know that the Burmese are very tolerant people. So will you be against their being given any form of government if your interests are safeguarded?—We want our interests to be safeguarded in any constitution. Apart from that, in the interests of Burma, in the interests of this country we are opposed to separation, not because we are Indians and India will lose Burma.

43. In answer to a question that was put to you you stated that Indian labour merely supplements. Indian labour is cheap compared to Burmese labour?—There is no competition. There are no data available. And for skilled labour it is not cheaper than Burmese labour. If there is competition we can know comparatively whether it is cheaper or dearer than Burmese labour. In fact Indian labour supplements. It does not supplant Burmese labour. It does not compete with the indigenous labour.

44. The Burmese standard of living is higher?—So far as I have seen in the villages one cannot say that the standard of living is higher. Of course it is slightly different. The requirements of the Burmese are different from those of the Indians, but all the same, I think, on the whole the standard of living is not very much higher than the standard of living of the corresponding class of Indians.

45. Do you happen to know U Ni, the leader of the party known as the Parliamentary organisation, and that he was not opposed to separation?—So far as I know that party is not in favour of separation.

46. I want to know whether you have known him and whether you have learnt anything from him as to whether he was in favour or against.—No, I had no personal talk with him.

47. You have known a leader by the name U Ba Soe, M.L.C.?—Yes.

48. Have you had any opportunity of learning from him whether he was in favour or against?—I had very little opportunity of knowing from him direct. . . .

49. I am only asking whether you know direct. I understand that you are representing the Indian interests. Am I to understand that the interests of the Burma Moslem League, whose deputation we had before us yesterday, are also included in your representation?—Our Deputation represents the common interests of Indians.

50. Sir Hari Singh Gour: I wish to ask you a few questions. I will first deal with the question of separation. Do you think the Indian community in Burma, that is to say those who are domiciled here—and they are what might be called Indo-Burmans—who have settled down here for generations favour the immediate separation of Burma from India?—They are decidedly opposed to separation.

51. And do you think this opposition to separation is based on the ground that it will impair the solidarity of the Indian Empire ?—It is largely on the ground that the interests of Burma will suffer.

52. In what way ?—This is a small country. . . .

53. And a very small revenue ?—Yes.

54. And the overhead charges have to be considered ?—Yes.

55. She will have to maintain her own defence and guard her own frontiers ?—As I have stated here in the Memorandum the whole of the revenues may be eaten up by military charges.

56. If you have a self-contained Government with the paraphernalia of a Viceroy and Governor General and so on you will have all the overhead charges. At present they are shared by Burma with India.—Along with a number of provinces in India.

57. What is the origin of the cry, "Burma for the Burmans ?" When did it originate ?—I believe it originated about 1916 in a small way, but as we find from the census report the cry itself is very old.

58. But what was the origin ? Was it merely a national pride or national sentiment or was it because of the fear of the Burmese that their economic interests were being impaired by the influx of Indians and other non-Burmese into Burma ?—Indians are found in large numbers in large cities and alongside the rivers and highways. They are in a concentrated form. And vast numbers of people are seen landing by every steamer. That gives a very exaggerated impression of the number of Indians who come here, and the Burmese are afraid that vast hordes of Indians will rush into Burma and swamp the whole population.

59. In the Memorandum prepared by the Burma for the Burmans League it has been stated that the Chettiyars who come here play Shylock by charging interest up to 60 per cent. and in that way they drain the wealth of the country. What is your view on that subject ?—The interest that the Chettiyars charge is quite reasonable. The interest that a Chettiyar charges is not higher than the average rate of interest which a retail shroff charges in India.

60. What is the average rate of interest that a Chettiyar charges ?—In Rangoon it is generally 1 per cent. and in the districts it is Re1-4-0 to Re1-8-0.

61. That is the normal rate of interest obtainable in India ?—Yes.

62. For the kind of security that is offered ?—Yes. If you give very good security you can get loans from these people for 10 or 12 annas. I know of large amounts being lent like that.

63. Is there any competition on the part of the Burmans for lending money for the purpose of financing the trade and industries of the country ?—Very little. The indigenous Burmese bankers are found in very few numbers—almost negligible.

64. There is no competition at all ?—Absolutely none.

65. Is there any competition by the established mercantile banks like the Imperial Bank, and so on ?—No. In fact these Chettiyars are the channels, the conduit pipes that reach the average peasant from the established mercantile banks.

66. That is to say, the joint stock banks lend money to the Chettiyars and the Chettiyars then lend the money to the people ?—To peasants as well as to traders. The joint stock banks will not think of reaching these people directly because of the risks involved.

67. Therefore they lend money to the Chettiyars and the Chettiyars in their turn lend money to the agriculturists ?—Yes.

68. And so they finance the agriculture of the country ?—Yes. Sir Harcourt Butler has referred to this community and we have quoted extracts from his speech (page 445, Supplementary Memorandum of the Indian Interests in Burma). I shall quote a few lines from it: "I value your good work. You "represent a very important factor indeed in the "life of the province. As a class moneylenders "come in for a good deal of criticism, but they have "always been an absolutely essential part in the "economic growth of any country. . . . You gentlemen have gradually and carefully built up a "remarkable system of banking throughout the "province, the ramifications of which are known to "very few except those who have taken the trouble "to make a real study of the question. Without "the assistance of the Chettiyar banking system "Burma would never have achieved the wonderful "advance of the last 25–30 years. The Chettiyars "provide the necessary finance to the agriculturists "in practically every village and, while enabling the "Burman greatly to increase his production, they "have at the same time undoubtedly inculcated "ideas of thrift and economy by their insistence on "regular repayments as regards both principal and "interest . . ."

69. The Chairman : It is on page 445, is it not ?—Yes.

70. Sir Hari Singh Gour : Do the Indians unfairly compete with the Burmans in the industrial development of the country ?—The Indians have no special advantage in industries.

71. I am talking of the backwardness of the Burmese to industrialise their country. The Government advances them 15 lakhs of rupees without interest for the establishment of a spinning and weaving mill, and the result was that owing to mismanagement that mill had to be sold to Steel Brothers for 7 lakhs of rupees, and under their management the mill is now flourishing, is it not ?—Yes.

72. It went out of Burmese hands to Steel Brothers' hands ?—Yes, and this fact of Burmese mismanagement has been brought to the notice of the local legislative council by means of a resolution.

73. Then your case is that Burma is not yet sufficiently ripe to enter into the commercial field ?—That is so.

74. It has not received that amount of industrial and commercial stimulus so as to be able to hold its own against the non-Burmans who come and trade here ?—Yes.

75. Now, as regards labour, it has been pointed out to us by the Burmese witnesses that the Indian labourer gets Rs12 to Rs15 and the Burmans want Rs30, and that is the reason why Indians compete unfairly with the Burmans. Is that so ? What are the wages of Indian labourers ?—It differs in various parts.

76. But what would be the average ?—It is never below Re.1 for an Indian.

77. One rupee a day ?—Yes.

78. It has been stated that Burmans themselves employ Indians in their paddy fields for harvesting and for various other agricultural operations ?—That is so.

79. To what extent ?—I think they always have a preference for Indian labour because Burmese labour is not available, and the Indian labour can give a better turn-out.

80. More efficient ?—Yes.

81. There is more sustained work and greater efficiency on the part of the Indian labour and this labour is prized by the Burmese themselves ?—Yes.

82. We examined the European interests in Burma and they said that they employ Indian labour because it is more efficient and they give more sustained work. In the Burma oil fields and refineries, etc., is it a a fact that the Europeans employ Indian labour in preference to Burmese ?—It is not in preference, but because Burmese labour is not available.

83. Now, what is the reason why Burmese labour is not available ? Is it a fact that the Burman has a rooted dislike to hard work ?—Yes.

84. Easy-going men ?—Yes.

85. He does not like hard life ?—No, and he does not like certain types of work. For instance, there are certain types of work for which he is not suited because of the heavy strain that the work involves. There are other types of work which he does not care to take, for instance, scavenging. Apart from industrial labour there are other types of labour which the Burmese would not take up. There are several types of work which they regard as infra dig —pulling rickshaws, carrying heavy loads, etc.

86. Now is it a fact that the Burman is not a thrifty man ? As soon as he gets a little money he goes and enjoys himself ? It has been said that the real reason why the Burman is not rich and is not able to compete even with the small moneylenders, as compared to the Indians is, he is a happy-go-lucky man, makes a little money and enjoys himself spending it. And as soon as he is at the end of his resources he goes and works again only to spend the money as before. Is that true of the Burman ?—That is generally true of the Burmans. There may be exceptions.

87. Now, as regards the franchise, you have stated that you like to retain the present franchise. Do you not think that there should be elasticity in the formulation of franchise and that it should be left to the local council to determine as to what should be the franchise. They may lower the franchise according to circumstances. Do you believe that there should be a rigid rule laid down, or do you think it is preferable to have an elastic system of franchise so that as the people get more educated and there is a greater demand for participation in politics the qualification may be lowered ? —It will be better to have elasticity.

88. You say you want sixteen seats for Indian representation provided the number of members of the legislative council remains as it is now. But have you got any advice to give to the Conference as to the revision of the numbers, whether the numbers should be increased so as to ensure larger representation and smaller constituencies ?—Re-grouping of constituencies ?

89. By cutting up constituencies ?—The present Indian constituencies are quite satisfactory.

90. And as regards the Burmese constituencies can you offer the Conference any advice ?—I have not considered that.

91. As regards further development of Reforms in Burma you have said that there is a galling discrimination in the matter of entering Public Services—what you have described here as " harassing " or embarrassing rules of exclusion." Do you want any percentage reserved in Public Services ?—We want fair field and no favour.

92. As regards your representation in the local council, why do you ask for separate representation ? Why should you not consider yourself as a part of the people of Burma and take your chance with them in regard to representation in the local council ?—The Burmans will never elect us. When there is a question of opposition between a Burman and an Indian, the Indian has very little chance.

93. Supposing we give you reserved seats in a general constituency ?—It will have all the disadvantages without having any benefits of special constituencies.

94. You recognise that separate representation cramps any effort to nationalise the people ?—But here it is only a temporary expedient till the two people get into such a harmonious working as to merge all differences between community and community. Till then separate electorates are to be kept up.

95. Yesterday we had before us a deputation of Mussulmans, and the Mussulmans admitted that as between the Hindus and the Muhammadans there is the very best of feeling here, and they would like to have a joint Indian representation here in Burma, and that there is no such thing as Hindu versus Muhammadan or Muhammadan versus Hindu here ? —Yes.

Mr. Rafi : They said they wanted separate representation.

96. Sir Hari Singh Gour : No ; I am coming to that. But there is another class, namely, the Burma Moslems. The Burma Moslems want separate representation because thay cannot get into the local council through the general constituency. The Buddhist-Burmans and the Burma-Moslems have not the same sympathy, and therefore they would like to have a separate Moslem constituency. The Moslems in Burma may be divided into two classes—first of all, the Indo-Moslems, and secondly, those Moslems whose one parent was of Burman extraction, but they are Burmans by race but Moslems by religion. As regards the Burmans by race but Moslems by religion, that class number about 92,000 and therefore want separate representation, but not the Indo-Moslems at all. What is your view on that subject ?—I understand that was what they stated, but there is no cleavage of interest so far on the ground of religion.

97. Then your point of view would be that if the Burmans by race and Moslems by religion want a separate representation, let them have it ?—Yes.

98. But that is no reason why there should be a difference between the Hindus and Moslems who are getting on on most friendly terms, and you would have a joint electorate for those two people other than the Burma Moslems who may or may not have it as they like ?—Yes ; if the Burma Moslems want a separate representation, they may put forward their case, and we have no objection to that.

99. Raja Nawab Ali Khan : It is said that Burma was compelled to part with her money for the purpose of certain protective duties in India. Do you agree with that view ?—In matters of fiscal policy no doubt certain provinces stand to lose as against some other provinces which may be more favourably situated under particular conditions. For instance, there is the steel protection duty in regard to which Burma has to bear the burden, and there is no steel industry in Burma which will get an adequate protection by the protection given to the steel industry. For instance, there is the match industry here which wanted protection. It offers a very large field and Burma stands to gain, whereas the rest of India may gain very little. The same is the case also with bamboo pulp.

100. Would you welcome any machinery in the Central Legislature which would make it possible for Burma to have an effective voice in regard to such matters ?—Yes.

101. Would you suggest some ?—I have asked for larger representation in the Assembly so that if it is a fairly large number, say a bloc of ten, they might act as a sort of party with sufficient influence and may act as a margin power. I know that very often in the Assembly the scales are turned by a small compact group, and if we have got a fairly big group, say, of ten (one European and nine other people), it would be sufficiently large to protect the interests of Burma.

102. The Chairman : I did not quite understand, Raja Sahib, what you had in your mind in putting that question ?

Raja Nawab Ali Khan : I have in my mind a body like a standing committee in the Legislative Assembly with equal numbers of Indian and Burmans ?—We would welcome it.

103. The Chairman : I think it is an important suggestion. But the difficulty is this, is it not ? It is very commonly said, and it may be true, that the fiscal policy of an area like the area in which the Central Legislature is responsible must be one single policy, and if it is to be carried, the tax must be one levied on the same principle and you would not draw a distinction between one party and another. If that is the case, what strikes one is this. How could you get an effective voice for a particular province which at present has got very special needs, but not necessarily general at all ? What had you in your mind, Raja Sahib ?

Raja Nawab Ali Khan : I had in my mind, sir, only this idea of the standing committee for Burma.

104. The Chairman : I believe what Mr. Chari proposed was that there should be an increased representation for Burma. But, after all, how does an increased representation for Burma help you in matters relating, for instance, to fiscal policy, which,

as I said, must after all be one single policy in the Central Legislature ?—My idea is that if there is a fairly large proportion of members there, if we are given the same representation as the major provinces —for instance in United Provinces it is 17, in Bengal it is 17, Madras 16, and Bihar and Orissa 12, and the Punjab 11—that will fairly secure our position. We must, at least, have representation just like any other major province.

105. Lord Burnham : I should like to pursue that question to have a little information from you, because I am not aware of any Customs rule anywhere which admits of exceptional treatment of one particular area. There may be such cases, but I do not know of them, and I was wondering how in regard to Customs duties you would be able by means of a committee to vary the amount of the tariff in favour of or against Burma ?

Sir Hari Singh Gour : He was not dealing with tariff at all. He was only dealing with the question of a standing committee to advise Government on the general administrative problems arising in Burma.

The Chairman : I misunderstood it too ; I am sorry ; I thought it had something to do with steel.

The Witness : What I had in view was merely a sub-committee to advise on matters of practical administration peculiar to Burma.

106. Dr. Suhrawardy : Am I right in saying that you want separate representation for Indians in Burma for the same reason that the minorities in India want separate representation for themselves ? You are familiar with it, I suppose ?—Yes, I am, but our case is not exactly on all fours with the conditions in India.

107. Not on all fours, but broadly speaking ? —Perhaps so.

108. And for the same reason you are opposed to joint electorates with reservation of seats in Burma ? —That is so.

109. Sir Arthur Froom : Mr. Chari, I understand that your chief reason against separation of Burma from India is that the interest of Indians in Burma would be jeopardised ?—That is one of the reasons.

110. That Indians by their industry have established a large amount of business in Burma and you are afraid that if it is to be separated from India, Burma might not develop ?—Yes, that is so.

111. Another reason which you have mentioned is that the presence of Indians in Burma has been a benefit to Burma ?—Yes.

112. Supposing the position of Indians in Burma under separation was secured by some legislation, you would still be opposed to separation ?—Yes, because our main source of opposition to the separation is that this country of Burma will suffer.

113. So, it is in the interest of Burma ?—Yes. It is in the best interests of Burma.

114. The two are bound up to such an extent that you think that in the interest of Burma the separation would not benefit Burma ?—Yes.

115. Do you consider that there is any close connection between the Indians as a race and the Burmans as a race ? They are rather separate races, are they not ?—Practically not in point of culture and religion.

116. I am not talking of culture ; but as a race ? —As a race they are separate.

117. Then you do not agree with this cry of " Burma for the Burmans " ?—No.

118. Why not ?—That is because, apart from the question of separation, we do not want any special protection, or special favour shown to us. We only want a fair field. We regard ourselves as Burmans quite as they themselves are.

119. Then how is it you have no sympathy at all with this cry of " Burma for the Burmans " ?—It is not a question of want of sympathy. While their interests ought to be safeguarded, the interests of other people ought not to suffer. That is our standpoint.

120. Then while going through another country, viz., India, we heard the cry " India for the Indians." Would you sympathise with that cry ?—For all practical purposes we say we are also Burmans.

121. That was not my question. My question was if in a great country like India, there is the cry " India for the Indians," why should you object to the cry in Burma, " Burma for the Burmans " ? —If taken in a broad sense, we have no objection to it.

Sir Hari Singh Gour : One is an advanced race, while another is a backward race ; that is the difference.

122. Sir Arthur Froom : Turning to page 443 of your Memorandum wherein you ask for safeguards against discriminatory legislation, you want those safeguards irrespective of whether Burma is separated or whether she is not ?—Yes.

123. In any further advance towards self-government you want these safeguards ?—Yes.

124. Mr. Chari, you are a well-known member of the Council of State, is that not so ?—I am a member there.

125. I have got a seat there myself and I have heard him there on many occasions. Now, with this claim for safeguards for your minorities in Burma, would you be prepared to give similar safeguards to minorities in India ?—The minorities require protection, and if there are similar cases like ours, no doubt they are entitled to similar protection.

126. Claiming as you do some sort of special protection for the Indian minority in Burma, and being a reasonable man and, as I say, a distinguished member of the Council of State, you would be prepared to agree to the protection of minorities in India on the same lines ?—Yes.

127. Sir Hari Singh Gour : Is there any difference between a politically advanced community requiring certain reservation as the Indians do and a backward community demanding separate representation because they are backward ?—There is a good deal of difference.

128. Then there is a difference between the politically advanced India and a politically backward community. You regard the Burmans as a politically backward community, having had their Reforms only for the past six years, and they have not had that political education which Indians had ? —Yes, when compared to Indians.

129. Lord Burnham : I have heard statements made that Mussulmans are politically backward in some parts of India ?

Sir Hari Singh Gour : In some parts of India they are so, sir, but only in some parts.

130. The Chairman : Just one question I would like to ask if my colleagues see no objection to it. I have no interest at all to embarrass you in the least unfairly. The question as to the prevailing opinion on the subject of separation of Burma is, of course, a very difficult one for any of us to form a judgment on, nor indeed is the prevailing opinion necessarily the only consideration ; there may be other considerations, too. Still it is a factor, and, now that we have got the Burma Provincial Committee here which has been elected by the Burma Legislative Council and which has just gone through the general election, I was wondering whether there will be any objection to my asking them this question. Is your Committee, U Aung Thin, of opinion, supposing there is a motion in favour of separation, that it is likely to be carried or likely to be lost in the present Legislative Council, assuming that no officials voted ? I have not the slightest notion of what the answer would be, and, of course, it is all necessarily provincial. But would there be any objection to our ascertaining from all your colleagues what your opinion is ?

U Aung Thin : I have not the slightest doubt, sir, that if the motion is put to the Legislative Council it would be carried unanimously, or, if not, by a very large majority.

Sra Shwe Ba : So far as the Karens are concerned they are for separation.

U Ba Shin : I am in entire agreement with what U Aung Thin has stated.

Mr. Eusoof : I am also of the same opinion.

Mr. Campagnac : I think such a resolution would be carried by a majority, and even those who oppose it would only want an amendment that there must be safeguards for the minorities in view of the separation.

Mr. Rafi : I think with safeguards it would be carried in the Council as at present constituted.

U Ba U : I also think so.

131. The Chairman : When you say with safeguards, what have you got in mind, Mr. Rafi ?

Mr. Rafi : With a provision for the safeguarding of the interests of the minorities.

132. The Chairman : I think it is very useful to have these views. As Mr. Chari said, this question was not the universal issue at the election. We understand that one of the parties made it a plank in its programme ; but the other parties did not make it a definite issue. Is your impression, Mr. Chari, very much different from these gentlemen ? Do you think yourself that it would be carried by vote of the Council ?—My difficulty is that this was not an issue at the time of the election. It may be carried in the Council.

133. You still doubt the real state of public opinion in the country ?—I greatly doubt.

Afternoon.

Deputation of Ladies.

The deputation consisted of :—

Miss COOMEE DANTRA, B.A. (Cantab.), Barrister-at-Law.
Ma PWA HMEE, Barrister-at-Law.
Mrs. M. FRASER.
Dr. MA SAW SA, F.R.C.S.I., D.P.H.
Ma TEE TEE LUCE.
Daw MYA SHWE, Deputy Inspectress of Schools.
Mrs. SEHERA JEEJEEBHOY, Hon. Secretary of the Sarada Sadan Association.
Mrs. MARTINUS.

1. The Chairman : Miss Coomee Dantra, you are a Barrister-at-Law ?—(Miss Dantra) Yes.

2. Most of these ladies are Burmese ladies, are they not ?—Yes. We have tried to get as many Burmese ladies as possible. There are two Indian ladies with us, one English and one Anglo-Indian lady.

3. Sir Hari Singh Gour is specially interested in the subject and he may put a few questions. I would first like to know if you yourself, Miss Coomee Dantra, would like to tell the Conference as to the points to which the deputation wants specially to call our attention ?—I thank you, sir, if I may do so.

Gentlemen of the Joint Free Conference,

We come before you not as representatives of any body or organisation of women, because our grievance is one which should and ought, in the first instance, be dealt with by the local Legislature, and consequently we organised no definite deputation before you ; but last night Sir Hari Singh Gour convinced me that this was an opportunity to stir up the lethargy of the local Council and to stimulate it to action by showing that we are in earnest, and that we do verily believe we have a real case to put before you as the final tribunal of appeal in this matter—and you have so kindly consented to give us a hearing, for which we offer our sincerest thanks. Since 1922, women have had the power to vote for members of the local Legislature on the same terms as men ; but for seven years we have been denied the right to choose one of our own sex to represent us, and this is the case in Burma, a country where women have taken an active part in public life for generations. In fact there are none of the obstacles in Burma which face women in India. We have no caste system, no purdah, we are not illiterate. On the contrary, we may own property and carry on business on the same footing as men, and there are no personal disabilities attached to women in Burma except this one. In fact the Burmese woman is perhaps, if I may venture to say so, through no peculiar virtue of her own save only the necessity of making ends meet and running the home, more thrifty and industrious than the Burman. Yet, while in India most of the provinces have enfranchised women completely by allowing them to vote as well as to sit on the local Legislatures, yet in this province we are only partly enfranchised ; we are only allowed to vote for men to speak for us.

This, no doubt, they can do adequately in a good many cases, and far more adequately in some, but we submit, though humbly, that we have a contribution to make towards the welfare of social life. We are, by reason of our sex, more fitted to deal with certain problems of a social character—Housing, Health and Hygiene and Education of children. All these, it is recognised, have a direct bearing on the prosperity of the country and a very direct bearing on the vital problem of crime in Burma as one of our members, Ma Tee Tee Luce, could convince you had you time. But we will not trouble you with detail. Our main grievance is that we women in Burma must, and are willing to, shoulder our responsibility towards the next generation and the welfare of the State in general. As things stand at present we are denied our full contribution. We may choose others to speak for us ; we may not speak ourselves. We thank you, gentlemen, once more for your great courtesy and kindness in letting us come before you, and we are glad we have availed ourselves of the opportunity in the hope that something constructive may arise out of it by action of the local Legislature which is to sit in a very short time.

4. Perhaps it will be useful if I were to remind the Conference that so far as this question of women being qualified to be elected a member of the Council is concerned, the present electoral rules provide that if a resolution is passed by the Council, after not less than one month's notice has been given of intention to move such a resolution, recommending that the sex disqualification should be removed, the local Government may, with the consent of the Governor, make an order in this behalf providing that no woman shall be disqualified by reason only of her sex from being eligible for election as a member of the Council. Then the members of the Conference will remember that in the Government Memorandum, Part III, page 50, it is stated, " A resolution was " moved on the 3rd February, 1927, to remove the " sex disqualification for membership of the Council. " In Burma the disqualification may be removed by " order of the local Government made with the " consent of the Governor in pursuance of a resolu- " tion passed by the Council. The division of " opinion on the subject was on party lines." I do " not quite know what that means. " At the con- " clusion of the debate the Home Member opposed " the resolution on the grounds that Burmese women " are unacquainted with Western institutions ; that " such an important constitutional change ought to " be deferred for consideration by the Statutory " Commission ; that, though thousands of Burmese " women belong to Associations, not a single Associa- " tion had requested the removal of the disability ; " and that Buddhist monks would object to being " legislated for by women. The resolution was lost " by 45 votes (including the official vote) to 31."

Would you ladies tell us whether this was one of the subjects that was raised or discussed at the recent general elections ? You had just had a general election in last November. Take the case of England. You know the political change in favour of women was a subject in election time. Of course, women voters constantly ask questions. Do you know whether that question has been raised ?—Yes, it was discussed at the last elections.

5. Have you got a champion in the Legislative Council ?—(Mrs. Jeejeebhoy) Yes, in Mr. Rafi.

6. It is difficult to see how a matter of this particular sort could be dealt with on party lines. Our experience in England, of course, is that these questions relating to women's political rights cut right across party questions for the most part. Do you think that there is one party that is solidly opposed to your wish ?—I do not think so. The Government was against the resolution.

7. The Chairman : The 45 majority included the official vote. How many provinces are there in India where now women can be members of the Council ? I know they can be in Madras because there is a lady there, Mrs. Muthulakshmi Reddi, and I think I am right in saying that there is at least one other province, the United Provinces.

Sir Hari Singh Gour : In the Central Provinces there is a lady member and I understand it is the case also in the Punjab.

8. Mr. Campagnac : So far as the Corporation of Rangoon is concerned there is no sex disqualification, is there ?—No.

9. Only three ladies have come forward to stand for election, one Anglo-Indian and two European. One Anglo-Indian lady and one European lady were elected and no Burman lady has come forward ? —Yes.

10. The Chairman : It looks as though even if the change were made the Legislative Council is not in any immediate danger of being swamped ?—No. There is no danger of ousting the men.

Colonel Lane-Fox : I should think this is purely a matter for the Legislative Council to pass a resolution.

The Chairman : I quite agree with you, Colonel Lane-Fox, but I think the decision was deferred for consideration by the Statutory Commission.

11. U Ba Shin : I would address my question to Miss Dantra. Of course, I cannot presume that you know the customs and traditions of the Burmese people ?—(Miss Dantra) I know that, in dealing with the Burmese people, the women are just as active as men. You see them in business, and also in the legal profession since the disqualification of women to practise at the Bar was removed. They are equally intelligent, if I may say so, and ready to take a share in the duties of citizenship.

12. What I mean by tradition is, you know that it is a kind of established practice in this land of pagodas that man is always regarded as lord and master ?—(Ma Tee Tee Luce) It is not true, and you know that we have enjoyed the same freedom as you have enjoyed in our past history and past generations. We still enjoy the same, you know it perfectly well. I think the only reason for denying us the right to enter the legislature is that we have not organised ourselves yet. We dislike being denied suffrage by our Burmese men ; we do not wish to fight for it, we want to be welcomed by you.

13. Would I be expecting too much if I say that your interests would be better safeguarded if they are in the hands of men ?—They are not. If you only give us a chance to work side by side with you, you will find that we work very well.

14. Am I to understand that it is not a question of distrust ?—(Miss Dantra) Certainly it is not a question of distrust. We feel that we have our contribution to make and want to share the responsibility of citizenship. We think that there is a definite waste in any society in which the contribution which we are ready to offer is not accepted. As we are all individuals we cannot speak in any representative capacity, but I think that is our main point. We feel that there is something we can do by working with men if men will accept us. (Ma Tee Tee Luce) Especially in reducing crime in Burma.

15. Mr. Rafi : Is it not a fact that a large number of women carry on business in this country ?—Yes.

16. They play an important part in the commercial life of this country ?—That is so.

17. U Ba Shin : I put this question because you said that your cause is being championed by my Hon'ble friend, Mr. Rafi. Now take the case of Muhammadan ladies who have got the system of purdah. If I remember aright we were told by the Muhammadan deputation that at any cost they would not give up the old tradition.—We are not talking about Muhammadans, we are talking about the Burmese in Burma.

18. Is it not a fact that Muhammadan ladies in this province number over 20,000 ?—(Miss Dantra) : I do not think that will affect the Legislative Council very much.

19. Mr. Rafi : Is it not a fact that Burma Moslem women do not observe purdah ?—No, they do not.

20. U Ba Shin : Mrs. Jeejeebhoy, I think I am right in saying that your father is at present a member of the Legislative Council ?—(Mrs. Jeejeebhoy) Yes.

21. Have you ever made an attempt to get your rights protected through his medium ?—As you know, he got into the Council only recently, that is in last November.

22. Sir Hari Singh Gour : Supposing by a fortunate chance you are made eligible for membership to the Legislative Council, the experience of women in other parts of India has been that they have a poor chance of being returned to the Legislatures through a mixed electorate. One or two attempts have been made, but they have failed and therefore they are disheartened.

The Chairman : Not all.

23. Sir Hari Singh Gour : I think you have in mind Dr. Reddi, sir. She is a nominated member of the Madras Legislative Council. Mrs. Chatopadhyaya, a very distinguished lady and a very capable lady, stood for the Legislative Council, but she was defeated. The difficulty is that they have to go and canvass from door to door and carry on the work amongst men. I think it is also equally difficult for women in Burma. In that case do you not think that a certain percentage of seats should be reserved for women, or that women should be elected by any recognised Association ?—We want both election and nomination. We want the same privileges as men have.

24. I am trying to show that you should be given the same privileges as men, because in course of time perhaps one of you will be appointed a minister, which will not be possible if you are only nominated members of the Legislative Council. Therefore, in order to remove the handicap which stands in the way of your getting returned to the Legislative Council through the open door in which men and women both scramble for a seat in the Legislative Council, do you not think it is necessary that at least for the next two elections, till women have gained experience in electioneering, a certain number of seats should be reserved for women ?—(Ma Tee Tee Luce) It is a very good idea. (Miss Dantra) At present this is only an individual opinion. I do not think we can offer any view on this subject except as individuals. Once the door is open I want to have just the same space to enter through as men have. I do not ask that it should be wider for us. If we are to fight (I prefer not to call it fighting, but rather working together), we should fight with them on their own ground ; we want a fair field and no favour. As I said, I do not think we can answer except as individuals because we represent no body of women. (Mrs. Jeejeebhoy) There is this point to be considered. We cannot compare Eastern nations with Western nations, because we are handicapped by very many social disadvantages. For that purpose we must have nomination as well as election.

25. Dr. Suhrawardy : Do you want separate representation for yourselves ?—No.

26. The Chairman : There are three possible ways (I do not say that I am in favour of them) in which the thing might be done apart from the way which has been mentioned by the lady who wants to have a fair field and no favour. One way is to say that out of the total number of members in the councils so many places must be filled by women. That is a possible way ; I do not say it is a good way. Another way is to say that there should be some seats which should be filled by women by nomination. Then there is yet another thing that you have to consider (I have heard it suggested elsewhere), the idea that the women voters should form a separate constituency and should themselves elect women to represent them. The objection to that as I think is very strong ; it is the objection which was put just now that a woman ought to try and take up her position as a citizen and ought not simply to represent one sex as it were in opposition to another sex ; she ought to be a citizen and play a general part in the advancement of the country. I do not know whether any of these considerations are in your mind ?—We want both election and nomination. Just as a certain number of seats are reserved for men by nomination a proportionate number of seats should be reserved for us.

27. Mr. Rafi : What you mean is that if you do not secure a sufficient number of seats through election it should be made up by nomination ?—Yes.

28. Sir Hari Singh Gour : Supposing there were 100 seats in the Legislative Council what percentage of seats you think should be reserved for women ?—It is very difficult to say that just now.

The Chairman : I doubt if the Conference will itself offer to make such detailed proposals.

29. Sir Hari Singh Gour : It has been said in the local council (and I am putting this question specially to the Burmese ladies) that the pongyis object to be ruled by women. Is it not a fact that in the whole history of Buddhism the nuns had a very considerable influence over your religion exactly in the same way as your monks ?—(Ma Tee Tee Luce) I do not know about the nuns, but we have had past queens and women as individuals who have had great influence over the country, and we still have it.

The Chairman : We wish to thank you, ladies, very much indeed for coming and giving us this interesting information which we will very carefully consider. As has been pointed out by my colleague, Colonel Lane-Fox, the matter really is more a matter for the Legislative Council to pass a resolution than anything else. But at the same time it is undoubtedly a constitutional question which will receive our attention equally. Thank you very much.

Memorandum submitted by the Burma Landowners' Association.

It is an undisputed fact that agriculture is the mainstay of this Province and the bulk of the population is engaged in agricultural pursuits of some kind or other. Of the total occupied areas in Burma more than half are under rice and receipts from land revenue are proportionately larger than receipts from all other sources. Despite this, Landowners in Burma, as a class, have not been given the recognition due to them by the Government; their opinion is not consulted and their advice seldom or never accepted.

To quote a few instances of the disabilities which land-owners and other agriculturists suffer: During the monsoons crops are frequently destroyed on account of floods, but it is understood that lack of funds prevented the Government from carrying out protective works. Then again the present depression in the Burma rice trade is due in a large measure to the imposition of a heavy export duty on rice. Mention must also be made of the increase in the demand of land revenue and other taxes. This Association also feels that the high rate of criminality in the Province is due to the existence of shops where drinks and drugs are sold and from which Government derives revenue. In the opinion of this Association, the financial disabilities above mentioned can be overcome by the expedient of allocating to Burma all revenues obtained from Burma so as to enable the Province to pay its own way for improvement and development in various directions.

Another matter which the Association is very much concerned about is the need for the preservation and improvement of cattle for agricultural purposes. It will be years before machinery can be introduced for agricultural purposes and to safeguard agriculture adequate steps are needed to close down slaughter-houses. Then again attempts have been made in the past by the Local Government to introduce legislation as between the landlords and the tenants, and though such attempts did not materialise owing to public agitation, it is to the interest of all concerned that measures such as these should not be initiated by the Government at all. The Association also views with concern the action of the Local Government playing the part of landlords, and wishes to urge that about 25 acres of waste lands be given to each individual agriculturist for agricultural purposes conferring the right of ownership after twelve years' continuous possession.

The Association therefore begs to request that in order to enable the Burma Landowners to carry out the above and similar projects, to safeguard the interests of agriculturists and to assist the Government in matters relating to the land and allied subjects, at least two members elected by the Land-owners be given seats in the Burma Legislature.

Finally, this Association begs to request that Burma be immediately separated from India and that the form of Constitution granted to Burma should be in advance of India considering that Burma is a country inhabited by one race of people professing one religion, Buddhism, and speaking one language, Burmese. Moreover, it is the only Province in India which has worked the Reforms most successfully.

Sir PO THA, Kt., C.I.E., O.B.E., representing the Burma Landowners' Association.

30. The Chairman: We are very glad to see you. The Conference has received and read the memorandum of the Burma Landowners' Association We all realise that it is an important document because agriculture is the mainstay of the province. We have many Memoranda which we have carefully studied, even though we do not have a witness about each of them; but we are very glad to have the opportunity of hearing you to-day. Do you consider that the landowners of Burma should have special representation in the council?—Yes; in order to enable us to say what we want to say we require at least two members in the Legislative Council.

31. What would be the qualification of the land-owners who elect them?—We want the Landowners' Association to elect the members for the Council.

32. The Landowners' Association should select the members?—Yes; the Landowners' Association desires to elect its own members for the council.

33. How many members are there in the Land-owners' Association, and what is the qualification of being a member?—There are about 700 to 800 members. Every landowner possessing a certain amount of land is eligible for a membership.

34. What is the size of the land he should possess?—From 300 acres upwards.

35. The Chairman: Are there members of the council now who are landowners?

U Ba U: There is a large number of them in the present council nominated by the Government.

36. Mr. Rafi: If there are any landowners in the present council would you still want separate representation for your Association?—Yes.

37. Do you consider that the present landowners are not fitted to voice the sentiments of the general body of landowners of this country?—I do not think so.

38. U Ba U: Are you very much concerned with the agrarian Bill introduced by the Government?—Yes.

39. You have represented the matter to the local Government?—Yes. In times of flood we have told the Government our needs, but their reply was that they had no funds.

40. Sir Arthur Froom: Is the position this, that the more important and wealthy landowners dislike the idea of going through a general election with the bother and turmoil of a general election?—Yes, it is so.

41. Sir Hari Singh Gour: When was the Land-owners' Association formed?—Two months before the arrival of this Commission.

42. Have you got any rules?—The rules are being prepared.

43. The Association has not yet been fully formed?—The Association has been formed and it only requires to be registered.

44. Would you give the same privilege that you want for your Association to the payers of income-tax, that is, special representation in the council?—We are not concerned with income-tax payers.

45. Have you got any landowners in the present council?—I have not paid attention to it.

46. Supposing you have landowners in the council, would you still press for separate representation?—We still require to have two representatives from our Association, because the landowners who are now members of the council may not represent us fully.

47. The Chairman: I understand that in the first council there were three members who were land-owners; in the second council there were eight members who were landowners, and I have got a list here of the members of the new council. and I am told that eleven of them are landowners and there is one nominated member, U Kyi Myint ?—He has not got much land ; he is a friend of mine.

48. The Chairman : All the members of the Conference very much appreciate your kindness in coming here to tell us your views which we shall very carefully consider.

The Witness : I wish to say one thing more. On two occasions Government tried to introduce legislation as between landlord and tenant. I only hope that in future such legislation would not be introduced by the Government. We also want Government not to increase the revenue as it has done in the past every five or six years. Whenever we had approached the Government in the past with a request for improvement in agriculture we were faced with the reply that the Government had no funds. That is due to the fact that a large sum of money has to be sent away to India. We hope that the money from Burma will be spent in Burma alone. The price of rice in Burma has fallen due mainly to the export duty. We want this export duty to be removed. In Burma we are of one race and one religion, Buddhism. In India there are different races. We therefore wish Burma to be separated from India, and Burma should get a constitution better than that of India.

Memorandum submitted by the Shan Sawbwas.

Under Burmese rule the Sawbwas of the Shan, but not the minor Shan chiefs, ranked as Kings in subordinate alliance to the Burmese King (or Emperor), and this fact is admitted not only by surviving scholars of the Mandalay Palace, like the Wetmasut Wundaukmin and His Holiness the Thathanabaing, but also by English authorities—thus Mr. C. E. Harvey, I.C.S., at page 270 of his "History of Burma" writes of an episode dated 1785 that "Shan chiefs, being royalty, took orders from the Crown alone." They alone could use white Umbrellas, wear Crowns, sit on Thrones, and dwell in Palaces; they took precedence of all Ministers and if in wartime they led their levies in person, they could not be given orders by the Burmese Commander-in-Chief unless he were a prince of the blood.

2. During the annexation of Upper Burma in 1886, in the first negotiations with the Sawbwas, the British were inclined to treat them as sovereigns; thus, in the Memorandum of a Conference between the Sawbwa of Hsipaw, the Chief Commissioner of Burma and the Chief Secretary, 4th February, 1887 (attached), the Chief Commissioner accepted the Sawbwa's contentions that he should be a king in subordinate alliance to the Queen Empress, and that a treaty should be made between him and the British Government.

3. Finally, other counsels prevailed, the Shan States were incorporated in British India, and the Sawbwas became British subjects. At this time of day it is no longer practicable for us to contest this decision, and although we regret it we are proud to be even humble subjects of His Most Gracious Majesty the King-Emperor. But the Montagu-Chelmsford Report, Section 310, refers to us under the head "Native States." In the eyes of our people we are still kings and they look to us to preserve all that they hold dear from the past, nor can we fulfil this duty if we are treated as mere salaried officials.

4. In mediæval times we overran and gave kings to Burma, and though, after the conquests of the great Burmese King, Hanthawaddy Hsinbyumyashin, in 1560, positions were reversed, and the king of Burma became our overlord, we were never ruled by the Burmese people.

5. Therefore we were excluded from the Reform Scheme in 1922. But, although we are not aware that our affairs have ever been laid before the Legislative Council of Burma, we have reason to believe that they have at times been dealt with by the Burmese Ministers and the Home Member.

6. While recognising the good qualities of officers of the surrounding races, of officers of mixed blood, and of promoted subordinates, we prefer Englishmen.

7. The constitution of the Federated Shan States, framed in 1922, was complete before we were formally consulted and we had to assent to it in a single meeting with Sir Reginald Craddock at Taunggyi. Nevertheless we gratefully accept it as a good constitution provided it is worked in the right spirit. But it cannot be worked in the right spirit unless it is interpreted by officers who know our customs. Officers who, before coming to us, have spent a lifetime under regular administration in Burma, come to us with preconceived ideas and it is difficult for them to appreciate our system, which is entirely different. Consequently in recent years instructions have issued which make our position difficult in the eyes of our people, and such instructions could not have been issued by officers well acquainted with our ways.

8. The Customary Law is especially difficult. Under our sanads we are required to rule "according to the custom of the country" and section 11 (2) of the Burma Law Act declares that "the law to be administered in a Shan State shall be the customary law of the State in so far as that law is in accordance with justice, equity, and good conscience, and in so far as the punishment which may be awarded thereunder, or the practices which are permitted thereby, are in conformity with the spirit of the law in force in the rest of British India. "Now under the Customary Law we have for countless centuries wielded powers of life and death, and under British rule we have always done so, our sentences being subject to revision by the Superintendent. The Customary Law, however, does not apply to British Indian Subjects who are not natives of the Shan States, and in order to try these for major offences we were made Additional Sessions Judges. But for every one homicide we try as Additional Sessions Judges, we try ten as Sawbwas under the Customary Law. Yet before the Simon Commission on the 31st of January, a witness, apparently Mr. Anderson, who was for a year our Commissioner, when asked whether Sawbwas have power of life and death, is reported as answering "The Sawbwa sat as Session Judge and an appeal lay to the Government of Burma." So ingrained in Englishmen living under regular administration is the idea that everything is done under their own law, that the witness saw things the wrong way round, not realising that our power is primarily the ancient Customary Law, which existed long before your codes and is still in force, and we were made English Judges only for a secondary purpose as an afterthought.

9. The witness also spoke as if legislation was effected by the Local Government under the Burma Laws Act applying Indian and Burmese enactments to the Shan States, the Sawbwas forming a purely Advisory Council and having no legislative power whatever. This is true only as far as it goes. None of us indeed have power to legislate outside his own State, but under the Customary Law of each State, which has been guaranteed to us by the British Government, we have, each in his own State, what is nothing less than legislative power, for custom has never been stationary, in every age it has changed to meet the changing times, and it was the Chief, acting as the mouthpiece of his people, who declared the change. It is a limited power, for what we promulgate must not be contrary to the spirit of British Indian Law, and we are subject to the guidance of a Superintendent, who sees that this condition is observed; but it is none-the-less legislative power. All past Superintendents in succession have recognised this fact, and they actually used to use the word "legislation" in approving the orders we issued.

10. The Customary Law is superior to British Indian Law in that it is suited to our people who evolved it. It preserves the social system and the Buddhist Church: in Burma there is no king and consequently there is no authority with power to discipline the clergy, and so religion has become disorderly, but with us Shans each Sawbwa is Head of the Church in his State and unfrocks them, so that morality is maintained. The Customary Law preserves local initiative as anything can be done till it is forbidden by a Superintendent. British Indian Law destroys local initiative, as nothing can be done until an Act has been passed to cover it.

11. We therefore wish respectfully to protest against the recent tendency to belittle the Customary Law as antiquated and obsolete, and to deny us all legislative power, nor can we accept the statement at page 2 of the official report on the Federated Shan States for the year 1923-24, that the Customary Law is "the mere will or whim of the Chief." A Chief who acted according to his mere will or whim was no true Chief, he was despised by his brother Chiefs and his people rose against him. The Customary Law was something far greater than his individual will—it was the good custom of old times, modified by the wise elders to suit the present, and the part of Chief, acting on the advice of his Ministers, was only to promulgate and enforce it.

12. Again, high English officials often complain that the Customary Law is unwritten and has never been codified. Has the Common Law of England ever been codified ? Customs change and can not be fixed in a code. The 1921 Census of India, Imperial Tables X and XIII, pages 134 and 202, of Burma volume X part II, shows that the Federated Shan States contain some thirty different races speaking some thirty languages, and most of them can neither read nor write. Yet each has its own Customary Law well understood by the people themselves. Customary Laws are strange to newcomers, and take long to learn; many of us Chiefs, even, know no English and are slow to answer when questioned by high officials, and that is why we pray that our English officers may be sent to us young and spend their whole lives among us.

13. Our present discontents are partly due to the changes imposed on us by new officers who do not know our ways, whereas Sir George Scott and Mr. G. C. B. Stirling, C.I.E., each served a lifetime among us, and Mr. H. A. Thornton, C.I.E., spent 15 years in the Northern Shan States alone.

14. In conclusion, we pray that His Majesty may be graciously pleased to rule :

(1) that our status as Hereditary Ruling Princes, although British Subjects, be confirmed.

(2) that the validity of the Customary Law of each State be confirmed, together with the power of a chief, always of course, under guidance, to change it, provided that such change is not contrary to the spirit of British Indian Law.

(3) that we may never be put under Burmans or Indians, or be subjected to any Reform Government, but that we shall always be directly under the English Head of the Province without any Asiatic intermediaries.

(4) that the English officers in charge of us shall always be English gentlemen from England who, after a few years training in Burmah shall be sent at an early age to spend their lives among us, as senior officers who have already spent the greater part of their service in Burma cannot understand our Laws and Customs.

(5) that our political relations with the Head of the Province should be through the medium of the two Superintendents, as it used to be in pre-Federation days, and their Assistants should be as few as possible and only in the capacity of advisers.

ANNEXURE A.

SHORT NOTE ON THE MEMORANDUM.

It has been the declared policy of Government to preserve the traditions and customs and to maintain the dignity of the Chiefs, and also to conserve the special powers, rights and privileges which they have enjoyed in the past.

His Excellency the Marquis of Dufferin and Ava, the Viceroy and Governor-General of India, in his speech in reply to an address from the Shan Community said that the British Government was fully determined to respect the independence of the Chiefs, to abstain from all interference with their internal affairs and to maintain the friendly relations which existed between them and the late Burmese Government.

The Chiefs appreciate the efforts of the British Government to carry out the policy as above indicated. In loyalty they are second to none and have every desire to co-operate with the Government in their endeavours.

They wish, however, to point out that the present institution and scheme of Government places them in a very subordinate position in the eyes of their subjects and their independence curtailed as every action of theirs which is prompted for the good of their people is liable to be vetoed by Government.

Summary of views expressed by the Deputation of Sawbwas from the Shan States.

Present :—

Saw ON KYA, Sawbwa of Hsipaw (Spokesman).
Saw KIN MAUNG.
Saw SHWE THAIK.
Hkien PAN SING.
Saw MYA.

1. The Chairman explained that Mr. Thornton had given many Members of the Conference present a good deal of information about the Shan States.

2. Saw On Kya, first correcting the evidence of Mr. Anderson (printed in Vol XV) explained that the Sawbwas as honorary sessions judges have power of life and death when administering customary law among their own people, subject to a first appeal to the Superintendent and a second to the Commissioner, but when the accused person is not a subject of the Sawbwas, e.g. a British Indian, the procedure of the Criminal Procedure Code is followed, and there is an appeal to the Governor as the High Court. The very small Chiefs are not honorary sessions judges, but merely try petty cases. Murders are rare in the Shan States. The last return for the States is for 1923–24, and gives only offences reported without attempting to distinguish true cases. In that year the number of offences dealt with by the Federated Shan Police (Government Police) was 672 in the Northern and 1,027 in the Southern Shan States. The total dealt with by the State Police was 596 and 807 respectively, a grand total of 3,102 offences in a population of 1,500,000, which is not large. "Violent crimes" which include murders, dacoities, etc., are 672. There are Magistrates in the States on pay of from Rs125 to Rs600.

3. The Chairman recapitulated Mr. Anderson's evidence to the effect that any law of Upper Burma can be extended to the Shan States by order of the Governor, with the approval of the Governor-General in Council, and that though the Shan States Council has no legislative power, the Sawbwas are summoned and take part in discussions. Saw On Kya agreed that the position is that inside his own State a Sawbwa may declare what the customary law is and does so after consulting the Ministers and headmen; and that such law changes as it had in Baluchistan where a large jirga had recently changed the system by which it had been sufficient for a husband to declare his wife unfaithful to prove her unchastity. The Sawbwas have jurisdiction in matrimonial disputes, which are settled on a money basis; the Chief of each State lays down the customary law relating to tenants and cultivation for his own State.

4. The Federated Police are restricted to the railway line and the mining centre of Nongto. The State Police are organised under a Superintendent and Minister and police the whole interior. The villages are formed into circles, and there are both circle headmen and village headmen. There are four constituent States in Hsipaw. They are consulted as well as the headmen on matters of importance.

5. At present there is one Commissioner who is the High Court in the Northern States and Superintendent and Political Officer in the Southern States, and three Assistant Superintendents. The Sawbwas want British Officers, but fewer and better than at present. (This in answer to Lord Burnham's question whether they did not ask for the same sort of personnel as at present). The old arrangement of having separate Superintendents for the Northern and Southern States and no Assistant Superintendents was better. The Assistant Superintendents are too apt to interfere. The Superintendents should be posted young to the States and remain there, as men posted from Burma want to follow the codes.

6. The constitution of the Federated States can be found in the Shan States Manual. The general wish of the States was to remain outside the jurisdiction of the Legislative Council. The States should be consulted before any law of Upper Burma is applied to them. The Council at present meets once a year at Taunggyi for a week or ten days; 18 to 20 Chiefs and 3 British officials being invited to it, the Commissioner presiding. At present the Sawbwas attend merely in an advisory capacity, which is unsatisfactory to them. They may say they want a school, and the Commissioner says then there are no funds for it.

7. As to finance, the Federation gets 6½ lakhs a year from Burma. The money was allocated to the States when the Federation was formed without consulting the States, and the States could quite well do without it. It would not be required if the Government of Burma did not insist on placing in the States an unnecessary number of officials.

8. The States pay up to 50 per cent. of their revenue to the Federation, the poorer States paying a smaller proportion than 50 per cent. The Federation pays 5 per cent. of its whole revenues, or 2 per cent. of the mineral royalties, whichever is greater, to the Burma Government. The four main sources of the Federation's revenue are in order:

1. Contributions from constituent States.
2. Forest.
3. Burma contribution.
4. Mines and minerals (almost the whole from one mine in 1923–24).

The smallest State has a revenue of Rs1,848 a year. The Chief's allowance is shown in the budget. The maximum has been fixed at 25 per cent. for the Southern and 15 per cent. for the Northern States, but no Chief gets as much as this. The actuals vary from Rs8,000 to Rs34 a month.

9. Under customary law the eldest son succeeds a Chief, if fit and suitable. In some cases the Governor-General and in some the Governor has to approve the succession. The people are contented with the rule of the Chiefs.

10. The Federation is on trial for ten years, and is due for revision in 1932, and the Chiefs are forming a committee to inquire into reform.

The Federation controls education, public health and police. There is a school for Shan States Chiefs, and Rs.67,000 were spent on it in 1923–24. The total outlay on education in that year was Rs3,55,000, or over 9 per cent. of the total expenditure, a very good percentage.

Memorandum submitted on behalf of the Anglo-Indian, Anglo-Burman and Domiciled European Community of Burma.

(This Memorandum has been prepared by the Council of the Anglo-Indian and Domiciled European Association, Burma, and by the Council of the Anglo-Indian and Domiciled European Federation, Burma, and approved at a general meeting of the Community, convened by C. H. Campagnac, Esq., M.L.C. (Burma), elected by the Anglo-Indian constituency.)

The Community on whose behalf the Memorandum is submitted.

The term Anglo-Indian is ambiguous, as it has been used synonymously with the word "Eurasian" to denote a person of mixed European and Indian (or Burmese) descent, and also, loosely, to designate a person of pure European birth who, through the exigencies of his business, professional or official, occupation, is obliged to spend most of the active years of his life in India or Burma. Still further complications are introduced into the connotation of the term Anglo-Indian by reason of certain restricted but officially recognised senses in which the word is employed in the Criminal Procedure Code and for electoral purposes. Together with the loose, popular meaning of the term we may ignore all political and legal implications that the word Anglo-Indian may convey. For the purpose of this Memorandum the broadest use of the term, which is ethnological, will suffice, and by an Anglo-Indian will be meant any person of mixed European and Indian (or Burmese) descent whether of legitimate parentage or not and whether the European strain be derived from the paternal or the maternal side. Inseparably associated with the Anglo-Indian cause is that of the Domiciled Europeans many of whom, though of undiluted European descent, have never been west of Suez, and in voicing the claims of the Anglo-Indian Community it is always to be understood that the Domiciled Europeans are deemed to be an integral part of it.

Though comparatively small in numbers, the Anglo-Indian Community is now a factor to be reckoned with and each census shows increase in numerical strength. It is true (indeed it is inevitable) with a race the members of which are of mixed Eastern and Western descent in infinitely varying proportions that those at the European end of the graduated scale should tend to merge into and be absorbed beyond all trace by the dominant white race from which no distinguishable line separates them. This is especially so in these days of increased facilities for travel and communication when so many Anglo-Indian children of the more fortunate classes receive their whole school and university training in England. It is not equally true that those at the Indian end of the scale tend to be assimilated in like manner by races of pure Indian nurture. In accounting for this, we touch on the vital point upon which rests the strongest claims of Community to recognition as an independent body, namely, that Anglo-Indians, if we ignore such accidentals, which are of no psychological or political value, as slight differences in the pigmentation of the skin and a certain provincialism of accent from which after all even the various Counties of England are not exempt, are a wholly Western race in all that goes to constitute the ethos of a people, that is, in religion, speech, customs, ethical and aesthetic ideals, and mode of life, dress, habitation and deportment. Though there are gradations in colour amongst Anglo-Indians, yet from the darkest to the fairest they are one with those of pure British culture in their outlook on life, the literature on which their minds are fed, the sports in which they indulge and in the British traditions of which they are proud and which they ever strive to maintain. To whatever category an Anglo-Indian may belong in an ethnological classification, he is psychologically speaking a white man—not nearly so, but entirely so, and in face of a paradox this is true no matter to what degree he may be coloured.

Apart from the above-indicated solidarity which characterises the Community, a claim for special recognition and representation is advanced on the grounds that unlike all other communities whose permanent domicile is India, the Anglo-Indian community is entirely literate, and it has no depressed lower classes which form so conspicuous a part of all the indigenous races. As small and severely handicapped as the Community is, its members are engaged in a surprising variety of skilled occupations and trades throughout the country. A large proportion of the Government appointments in such services as the Judicial, the Telegraph, the Police, Customs and Excise are held by Anglo-Indians. The Anglo-Indian employees are the mainstay of the Railways. In the large business firms and banks, the responsible clerical staff is usually Anglo-Indian. And to come to activities in more responsible fields, we find Anglo-Indians holding important administrative posts and satisfactorily filling the position of Heads of Departments, proving to be efficient barristers, doctors and engineers, and where so fortunately placed as to be given the necessary start, building up great business in the industrial world.

The Franchise.

We are of opinion that the basis of the present franchise is far too wide for a country in which a democratic form of Government has only been in existence for a few years. We think that no person should be entitled to a vote unless he is literate in his own mother tongue and either born in Burma or has at any period been continuously resident in Burma for a term of not less than five years. An exception to the residential qualification which we have advocated should be made in the case of Government or quasi-Government servants, who are liable to be transferred from one Province to another. This rule would not in any way affect elections of the Anglo-Indian constituency, but in view of the fact that Anglo-Indians are entitled to stand as candidates for general constituencies it is a matter of some interest to the Community.

In Burma there is a large floating population of Indian labourers who come to Burma seasonally as reapers and as labourers in Mills and Factories. This section of the Indian population is for the most part illiterate and has no political or other interest in Burma. These people vote as ordered by their "Maistries," i.e., their supervisors, who have taken a contract for supplying labour.

Their votes can be obtained by the highest bidder, and obviously there must be a number of cases of impersonation which it is difficult or impossible to detect as the only persons who can identify such voters are the Maistries. We believe that if the franchise was narrowed in the way which we have suggested, it would result in eliminating these votes.

Representation on the Burma Legislative Council.

In view of the fact that the Community is entirely literate and in view of the important part played by the Community in the life of the Province, we would urge that at least four seats be reserved for the Community in the local Legislative Council.

There should be two seats for Rangoon, and one each for Lower Burma and Upper Burma. It is hardly possible for one member to keep in touch with the needs of the community throughout the whole Province or to keep in touch with the whole of the electorate.

In view of the important part played by women in the life of this Province, we would urge that women be allowed to stand as candidates for the Legislative Council.

Central Representation.

We would urge that so long as Burma remains a

Province of India, the Anglo-Indian Community in the Province should be allowed to elect a representative to the Legislative Assembly. At present there is only one nominated representative of the Community to represent the whole of India and Burma. In the event of the Community in Burma deciding to urge for the separation of Burma from India we can conceive that it might be difficult for a member residing in India to support their claims as Anglo-Indians domiciled in India might be opposed to it. We cite this as an example to show the necessity of the Community in Burma being allowed to have its own representative on the Assembly.

REPRESENTATION ON LOCAL SELF-GOVERNING BODIES.

At the present time, the Community is not given any separate representation on the Corporation of Rangoon. It has to take its chance in a combined electorate of Europeans, Jews, Armenians, and Parsis. In view of the important part played by members of the Community on the old Municipal Committee, and on the Corporation of Rangoon, we feel that in addition to the present representation at least one seat should be reserved on the Corporation for the Community, to be filled either by election or nomination. We would further urge that representation should be secured to the Community on the Committees of the Rangoon Development Trust, the University Council, Burma Railways Advisory Board, Port Commissioners, and any other local bodies which may hereafter be formed. Similarly, representation should be secured to the Community on the Municipal Committees of Moulmein, Bassein, Mandalay, Akyab, Tavoy and Insein.

MINISTERS.

We are of opinion that it is not possible for two Ministers to supervise effectively and direct the policy of Transferred Subjects. We would, therefore urge that provision should be made in the Constitution for the appointment of at least four Ministers to be in charge of the following portfolios :—

(1) Minister responsible for Education, Commerce and Industries ;
(2) Minister responsible for Forests and Communications ;
(3) Minister responsible for Public Health ;
(4) Minister responsible for Local Self-Government and Excise.

We would urge that out of the four ministers appointed, one of them should be elected to be the Minister-in-Chief by the elected members of the Legislative Council. This would ensure the joint responsibility of the Ministers which we consider to be essential for the good government of the country.

EXECUTIVE AND JUDICIARY.

We think that the time has come when the Executive and Judicial services should be separated. It is absolutely essential if the integrity of the Empire is to be maintained that the people of the country should have absolute confidence in the impartiality of Judicial Officers. It is impossible for them to have this confidence when the same officer is called upon to discharge both judicial and executive duties. We think that all Judicial appointments in the Province should be made by the Head of the Judiciary and that the executive should not have any voice in the making of such appointments. Further, we are of opinion that the Chief Justice and the Judges of the High Court should be appointed by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in consultation with the Judges of the High Court.

IMMIGRATION ACT.

We consider that an Immigration Act should be passed prohibiting undesirable aliens from entering the Province. We would draw attention to the fact that there has been a large invasion of Chinese undesirables into the Province. A large percentage of Chinamen coming to Burma earn their livelihood by smuggling and keeping gaming houses and opium, cocaine and morphia dens. There is not the slightest doubt that the presence of these foreigners in Burma has had and is having a very pernicious effect on the people of the country.

SEPARATION FROM INDIA.

We are of opinion that Burma would be better off and have a greater opportunity of developing her resources if the Province was separated from India. For this reason, we would urge that a Committee of Enquiry be immediately appointed to enquire and report on the financial relations between India and Burma with a view to bringing about separation at an early date.

EDUCATION.

We attach the very greatest importance to this subject. We are of opinion that the whole system of education in English Schools should be overhauled and brought up to date. With the opening of the University and the large number of Burmese and Indian students who are graduating every year, it is becoming increasingly difficult for the Community to find suitable avenues of employment.

The great majority of the members of the Community are too poor to be able to provide their children with a University Education. It is for this reason in the past the majority of the Community had to be content to find employment in Government Offices and in the Railway and Telegraph Departments. Formerly a lad who had passed his Middle School found no difficulty in obtaining employment. Now, however, it is almost impossible for a lad to obtain any kind of employment, unless he has passed the High School Final Examination, and even then he can only generally secure employment in a very limited sphere. Under these circumstances, it is obvious that the Community must seek for other channels of employment, but unfortunately the present education imparted in the English Schools is not calculated to fit them for employment except in the capacity of clerks.

The only subjects taught in these schools are English, Mathematics, History, Geography and one second language. There is hardly any opportunity for pupils to study subjects such as Physics, Chemistry, and other Sciences, Civics, Economics and Political Economy.

We would, therefore, respectfully request that this Commission do recommend to Parliament to appoint an Expert Educationalist from England to inquire into the present system of English Education in this Province, and to make recommendations which will be binding on the Government of Burma for the improvement of Education in English Schools on the most modern lines and to introduce commercial education into these schools.

SHOULD EDUCATION IN BURMA BE MADE A RESERVED SUBJECT.

This question has caused us considerable anxiety. We have discussed the matter very thoroughly, and we have had the advantage of the advice of three Educational experts in the Province. In answering this question, it is necessary for us to try and forecast the future. We have had to consider whether there is any likelihood of the grants-in-aid of English Schools being cut in the local Legislative Council during the coming decade. The experts whom we have consulted have expressed the opinion that there is no likelihood of there being any reduction in grants during the next ten years. We presume that they have based their opinions on the fact that during the five and a half years the Reforms have been in existence in Burma, no attempt has been made to cut the grants in the local Legislative Council.

On the whole, we are of opinion that we are not in a position, having regard to the advice given to us, as well as to the fact that there has been no reduction in the grants to English Schools in Burma, to urge that English education should be made a Provincial Reserved Subject.

At the same time, we feel it our bounden duty to urge that the Constitution should provide some safeguards for the Community and that in the event of any attempt being made to reduce the grants or to abolish these schools that the Governor of the Province should be empowered to restore the grant out of Provincial revenues, or that the money be provided out of either Central or Imperial revenues.

We claim that the British nation which was directly responsible for bringing this Community into existence is morally bound to see that these schools are maintained to enable the Community to preserve its racial culture and religious beliefs, and to live up to the traditions of its forefathers. The Community must in justice be enabled to receive an education which will enable its members to fit themselves for employment in the Province of their domicile or birth, and we submit that it would be a great blot on British administration if this Community was allowed to be submerged by the torrent of Reforms which threaten to sweep over the country.

SHOULD ENGLISH EDUCATION BE MADE A CENTRAL RESERVED SUBJECT ?

We are aware that a Conference in Calcutta has passed a resolution that the Community in India should ask that English Education be made a Central Reserved Subject. In view of the fact that substantial reductions have been made by all the Provincial Councils of India in grants to English Schools, we are not surprised that the Community in India should desire that English Education be made a Central Reserved Subject.

In Burma, however, the position is different, and there has been no cutting down of grants to English Schools. Even, however, had there been any reduction in the grants, we would have urged that Education be made a Provincial Reserved Subject rather than a Central Reserved Subject. The Government of India has in the past regarded Burma as a sort of backwater of Empire and has persistently overlooked and neglected the claims made from time to time by the Government of Burma. We feel that if English Education in Burma was made a Central Reserved Subject, there would be grave danger of the needs of the Community in this Province being overlooked. Further, conditions in Burma are entirely different from India. In Burma we have a residential and up-to-date university and the standard of education required for admission to the University is higher than that required for entrance to Indian Universities. We are advised that if the Indian standard of Education in English Schools was introduced into Burma, a pupil after leaving school would have to study for one or two years before he could qualify for admission to the University of Rangoon. Under these circumstances, so far as Burma is concerned, we are definitely against English Education being made a Central Reserved Subject.

THE EFFECT OF THE REMOVAL OF THE 10 PER CENT. RESTRICTION OF NON-EUROPEAN CHILDREN TO ENGLISH SCHOOLS.

Before the introduction of the Reforms, the Managers of English Schools were prohibited from admitting more than 10 per cent. of Non-European children into these schools. Since the introduction of the Reforms, this 10 per cent. restriction has been abolished, and now it is left to the discretion of the Principals of the Schools to admit any number of Non-European children, provided they are satisfied that such children have a sufficient knowledge of English to be able to follow the school curriculum.

The result of the removal of the 10 per cent. restriction has been to increase the percentage of Non-European children in English Schools to about 36 per cent. According to the last quinquennial report, it appears that the result of admitting such a large percentage of Non-European children into schools has been to lower the standard of education. as children whose mother tongue is English have to be kept back owing to the inability of the Non-European children to follow the courses of instruction.

We feel that if the percentage of Non-European children in English Schools is not restricted, there is very grave danger of the character of these schools being entirely changed, and that the schools will cease to be attractive or useful either to English or Asiatic pupils. The reason why the parents of Non-European children desire to send their children to English Schools is because they wish them to obtain a thorough grounding in English and to learn the English modes of life and customs.

There is also the religious aspect to be considered, and most parents feel concerned that their children may be prejudicially influenced by coming into contact with a large number of children of other religions.

INSPECTORS OF ENGLISH SCHOOLS.

Another feature which has contributed towards the lowering of the standard of European education has been the abolition of the Inspectorship of English Schools. We believe that this is the only Province in which there is no special Inspector for English Schools. The post was abolished against the advice of the Education Department of this Province. We would urge as strongly as we can that this post should be recreated immediately. In fact we feel that in Burma two special Inspectors should be appointed for the inspection and guidance of English Schools.

ANGLO-INDIAN TEACHERS.

There has always been a great demand for Anglo-Indian teachers, both men and women in English and Anglo-Vernacular Schools. The last Quinquennial Report points out that it is very difficult at the present time to secure men teachers for these schools. The reason is obvious. Men with University Degrees find it more advantageous to obtain employment in the various Civil Services where the scale of pay and chances of promotion are much greater than in the Education Department. We would, therefore, urge the necessity of increasing the pay and prospects of teachers in English and Anglo-Vernacular Schools, and that pressure be brought on aided schools to similarly raise the pay of teachers in their schools. We do not think it possible for aided schools to increase the present pay, unless there is a proportionate increase in the grants given by Government.

Further, we think encouragement should be given to Anglo-Indian teachers by reserving a certain percentage of posts for them in the superior service and also by appointing them to Inspectors and Inspectresses of schools. We would also point out that it is impossible for a teacher who does not hold an English Diploma in teaching to be appointed as a Headmaster of a School. We know of an instance in which a teacher who had officiated in a Government school for a number of years as Headmistress was informed when she applied to be appointed permanently to the post, that owing to the fact that she did not possess an English Diploma she was not elegible for confirmation.

BURMESE A VERNACULAR SUBJECT.

We wish to draw attention to the fact that since the introduction of the Reforms, Burmese has been made a compulsory subject in European Schools. While we admit that it is desirable that Anglo-

INDIAN POLICE ASSOCIATION, BURMA BRANCH.

Indians in this Province should have a knowledge of the Vernacular, we are of opinion that the standard of Burmese which has been prescribed in these schools is so high as to make it extremely difficult for Anglo-Indian lads to pass the examination. All that should be required is that an Anglo-Indian lad should have a colloquial knowledge of the Burmese language, as there are no Burmese Text Books in scientific or literary subjects. In the English High School, Maymyo, 1927, there were 14 failures out of 30 in the High School Final. Out of 14, 13 were Anglo-Indians who failed in the Vernacular paper. Further, we would urge that Burmese should be taught from the first standard, and not, as is at present, the case only from the fourth standard.

PRIMARY EDUCATION FOR CHILDREN OF THE ANGLO-INDIAN AND DOMICILED COMMUNITY SHOULD BE MADE FREE AND COMPULSORY.

We would urge that Primary Education should be made compulsory and free, and in doing so we would draw attention to the fact that Burmese Legislators have urged that Primary Education in Vernacular Schools should be made free. So far as Burmans are concerned every Burmese boy can obtain free education through the medium of Buddhist Monasteries. There are no such facilities for children of European descent. Quite a number of these children are deserted by their European fathers, and we consider it to be a blot on British Administration that such children, who in many cases are by appearance Europeans, should be going about the country without education and practically living as Burmans. It is not surprising that many such children should add to the criminal classes of this Province. We can conceive of nothing more likely to lower British prestige in the East than to allow these children to be roaming about in the towns and villages without any education and without any trade they can follow.

METHODS BY WHICH THE COMMUNITY CAN SECURE A FAIR SHARE OF APPOINTMENTS.

We wish to point out that the Census figures relating to appointments held by Anglo-Indians in Government Services cannot be taken to represent accurately the Anglo-Indians so employed, by reason of the fact that a large number of Goan and Indian Christians come to Burma annually and pass themselves off as Anglo-Indians. It would appear that Government does not put an applicant to strict proof that he is an Anglo-Indian or even a British subject. All that is required is that the applicant should have a European name, be able to read and write English and don European clothes. These Goanese and Indian Christians who get into Government Service naturally keep the doors open for their relations.

We consider that the practice of making appointments through the medium of Selection Boards should be abolished and appointments should be made by competitive examination. Care should be taken to see that the candidates are either born or domiciled in the Province. In the matter of appointments we do not ask for preferential treatment, but demand equality of treatment. In cases where appointments cannot be made by competitive examination, Anglo-Indians should be represented on the Selection Board, and a certain proportion of appointments should in such cases be reserved for them.

DISABILITIES OF LOCALLY TRAINED NURSES.

We have in Rangoon a thoroughly up-to-date hospital, and the surgeons attached to the hospital are highly qualified men with English diplomas. The nurses of the hospital are Burmese, Karen and Anglo-Indian. They have to undergo training for a period of five years before obtaining certificates as qualified nurses. They are eminently suitable for the work as they can all speak at least one Vernacular language, and many of them are conversant with two Vernacular languages. In view of the fact that the majority of the patients are Indian and Burmese this knowledge of the Vernaculars is a very great asset.

These nurses, however, have a very real grievance, as they are hardly ever promoted to be sisters.

The sisters of the hospital are almost invariably recruited from the British Isles. So far as the Anglo-Indian nurses are concerned they are for the most part better educated than the average nurses from England, and we feel it is wrong in principle and against the spirit of the Reforms that these girls should not be promoted as sisters simply because they have not undergone training at an English hospital.

ANGLO-INDIAN MILITARY UNIT.

At least 80 per cent. of the male members of the Community are trained to arms. The majority of them start their military training in Cadet Corps at school. Before the war, the Volunteer Corps of the Province were composed mostly of Anglo-Indians and the same applies to the Indian Defence Force. On the outbreak of war a very large percentage of members of the Community volunteered for active service. Many of them went to England with the Burma Contigents and were drafted into various British Regiments and took part in fighting on the Western Front. A large number enlisted in the Mobile Battery and supplied a constant draft of gunners to reinforce the British troops in Mesopotamia. A number of these men took part in the seige of Kut. In Kut they proved themselves to be efficient artillery men and were frequently mentioned in despatches. One of them, Sergeant Heals, was awarded the D.C.M. When food supplies ran short the men agreed to go on half rations while the Indian troops who were becoming restive remained on full rations. After all their guns had been put out of action by the enemy these men volunteered to lead a bayonet charge to remove the Turks from the front line of trenches which they had occupied. Lead by Major Anderson they regained the trenches, but not until 75 per cent. of them had been killed or wounded. The survivors of the siege took part in the long march across the desert to Turkey, where they were kept in captivity. It is recorded that while a large percentage of the British troops fell out on the march, barely one per cent. of Anglo-Indians succumbed to the trying ordeal. We have set out these facts to prove that the men of the Community are not only good soldiers, but also possess stamina and fighting qualities equal to that of any troops in the world. We would therefore urge that an Anglo-Indian unit be recruited in Burma.

Memorandum submitted by the Indian Police Association, Burma Branch.

In response to the invitation published in the communique issued on 6th March, 1928, by the Indian Statutory Commission, I have the honour to submit the following representations on behalf of the members of the Indian Police Service serving in Burma.

2. The Indian Police Association, Burma Branch, is recognised by the Government of Burma. It can claim to be thoroughly representative of the officers of the Service in Burma, as over 98 per cent. of these have joined the Association.

3. My Association does not desire in this Memorandum to set forth any views regarding the desirability or otherwise of extending the Reforms introduced in the year 1919, but desires only to put forward for the consideration of the Commission certain matters regarding which there have been and still are anxiety and dissatisfaction. These matters have already demanded deep consideration under the present constitution and, if a further substantial instalment of reforms is to be given, and the steadying and restraining influence of the British Parliament is to be still further relaxed, they will have to be considered afresh. If a large degree of autonomy and control over the (formerly) Imperial Services is given to local legislatures it can safely be predicted that the members of those Services will receive scant consideration from the new Legislatures—there is no gratitude in politics. It is respectfully submitted that their interest should be protected against such possibilities.

4. Apart from general considerations which apply to all provinces in the Indian Empire, there are some which are peculiar to Burma, and which render it desirable for Police officers serving in Burma to submit a separate Memorandum. The chief of these is the growing belief that Burma will be given separation from India and will thus no longer be under the Government of India.

5. The main points to which my Association is desirous of drawing the attention of the Commission may be summarised as follows :—

(a) that the service should not be provincialised, but that it should retain its Imperial status.
(b) that recruitment should continue as at present.
(c) that, in the event of Burma being separated from India, there should be no reduction in the emoluments of officers of the Service.
(d) that a Family Pension Fund, similar to that recently introduced for the Indian Police Service should be established.
(e) that the security of ordinary pensions should be guaranteed.
(g) that the scale of proportionate pensions at present allowed is inadequate and should be revised.

6. These points may be briefly elucidated.

(a) If the Service were provincialised there would be grave risk that it would soon develop the defects which led to the Police Commission of 1903. This would mean a very serious loss of efficiency and the degradation of a Service which is acknowledged to be second in importance only to the Indian Civil Service itself, being one of the two Security Services. The handing over even of the subordinate branches of the Service to popular control is to be deprecated for many years to come.

(b) As regards the necessity for the retention of Imperial recruitment, it must be admitted that the genius of the Burmese race does not lean towards the maintenance of a high state of discipline or efficiency. For this reason and for the fact that there are other besides Burmese interests to be safeguarded it is respectfully submitted that the present proportion of Imperial to local or Provincial recruitment—namely 50–50 should be maintained. The Governor in Council should control the postings of Imperial Officers.

(c) There should be no attempt to whittle down the emoluments of officers on the ground that recruits could be obtained at lower rates.

(d) A Family Pension scheme for the Non-Covenanted Services in India has recently been sanctioned. If Burma is separated from India a Family Pension Fund similar to that sanctioned for the Indian Non-Covenanted Services should be established for similar services in Burma, any contributions which have already been paid into the Central Fund being credited to the Fund to be established in Burma together with interest which has accrued on the same.

(e) The security of ordinary pensions is another question which has been the cause of grave anxiety in the past. This anxiety will be accentuated if Burma is given separation, and my Association would urge that, in the event of the Provincial Government's defaulting in this vital matter, the British Government should automatically become responsible for the payment of these pensions.

(f) It has lately been announced by the Secretary of State for India that an Officer who is at present working in a reserved field will be allowed to retain for a year after his field of service has been transferred the right to retire on proportionate pension. My Association would urge that it would only be equitable to allow an officer—no matter to what service he belonged—to retain the right to retire on proportionate pension whenever his conditions of service were altered by the grant of a further instalment of self-government. It would, in any case, be an unwise and short-sighted policy to discontinue the concession of proportionate pension with effect from the introduction of this, the second instalment of reforms as that would immediately drive into retirement a number of experienced and valuable officers who would not risk staying on under what might prove to be irksome conditions.

(g) The Proviso to Section 96B (2) of the Government of India Act states that: "Every person appointed before the commencement of the Government of India Act, 1919, by the Secretary of State in Council to the Civil Service of the Crown in India shall retain all his existing or accruing rights or shall receive such compensation for the loss of any of them as the Secretary of State in Council may consider just and equitable." There is some doubt as to the interpretation of the words "existing and accruing rights" but my Association would respectfully urge that the existing scale of proportionate pension does not give adequate compensation for the loss of career and prospects—particularly in the case of a specialized service like the Indian Police—and would submit that compensation in addition to proportionate pensions should be granted to such officers of the Police Service as may find themselves unable to accept the new conditions of service. A precedent for this will be found in the treatment accorded to British Officers in the service of the Government of Egypt when that country was granted independence and in the terms proposed in the suggested new constitution for Ceylon.

7. In conclusion, my Association would urge the advisability of appointing a special Commission to inquire into and advise upon the whole question of the Police and other Services in Burma and their relations with the Local Government and with the Secretary of State. This would appear to be specially necessary with regard to the Security Services, for any chance of their becoming the instrument of local politics must be strongly guarded against.

Memorandum submitted on behalf of the Mussulmans of the Central Provinces and Berar by Mr. TAJ-UD-DIN.

CENTRAL GOVERNMENT.

I am not going to discuss what sort of Government is suitable as Central Government and would like to leave this question to All-India Associations and All-India leaders of public opinion. But whatever form the future Government of India may take, I am strongly of opinion that it should be stable and strong and with " real powers " of control over the Provincial Governments. There should always be one-third members of both the Houses from the Moslem community, to be elected under separate electorate by Moslem votes from different provinces.

The present representation of C.P. and Berar Moslems by one member in the Assembly and half member in the Council of State is most inadequate and this number must be raised. As I have not discussed the details of the composition of the Upper and Lower Houses of the Central Government, hence I can not fix any number for the representation of Moslems from our Provinces. But the members for the Lower House should not be less than seven and for the Upper House not less than three. This figure is on the assumption that the Lower House will be consisting of about five hundred members and Upper House of about two hundred members.

FRANCHISE.

The voter's qualification for the Lower House may be reduced, but for the Upper House, though the direct election should only take place, the qualification may only be reduced to this extent that the voter's qualification for the present Assembly be put in for the qualification for the Council of State. If indirect election is put into practice for the Upper House then Moslem members must be elected by Moslem votes only. That right of Moslems to elect under separate votes and separate register should not be changed. As we have discussed this question of separate representation, of joint election and joint election with the reservation of seats in all its bearing in the chapter dealing with local bodies, we do not wish to repeat the arguments for and against it, but we wish you to note that taking away this right will be killing the Moslem representation and placing the important Moslem minority at the mercy of the Hindu majority.

In the Central Legislature (in both the Houses) one-third seats should be for Moslems and we cannot agree to lesser number of seats than one-third. This should be guaranteed in the Constitution.

THE PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT.

The number of the members of the Provincial Legislative Council of C.P. and Berar should not be less than 200 and out of which 50 should be Mussulmans. The election of Moslems should be under the separate election and by Moslem voters only. The distinction of " transferred " and " reserved " subjects should be done away with. In the Executive Council, which should consist of five to six ministers, there should always be two Moslem ministers. Besides placing important portfolios under two Moslem ministers, they should be put in charge of the Moslem education and Islamic culture. They should be in charge of supervision of primary education, schools, orphanages, widow homes and Urdu language and its script. One of them should look after the interest of Mussulmans in Services, local bodies and justices. In these subjects they should have direct access to the Governor and their power should be real. Their salary and vote of confidence on them should only be on Moslem councillors' votes.

The franchise should be as wide as possible and universal adult suffrage should be adopted. The present constituencies for the election of Moslem members are too big and unwieldy. The Moslem constituencies should be made small and of lesser area than they are at present. If fifty members are allowed, I will suggest that thirty should be from C.P. and twenty from Berar. This number can be reduced proportionately if the Provincial Council is constituted of less than two hundred members. The Governor's power of veto and certification should be maintained and for the protection of minority interest steps should be taken to invest him with adequate powers of control, superintendence, and supervision.

Further, we strongly advocate that the most important provision contained in the so-called Lucknow Congress League Pact of 1917, that " no Bill nor any clause thereof, nor any resolution introduced by a non-official affecting one or the other community (which question is to be determined by the members of that community in the Legislative Council concerned) shall be proceeded with if three-fourths of the members of that community in the particular council, Imperial or Provincial, oppose the Bill or any clause thereof or the resolution " should be incorporated in the new Constitution of India. The authors of the Montagu-Chelmsford report objected to this as being too widely-worded and would in practice be so widely interpreted by those to whom its interpretation is specifically committed that it would be unworkable. But the same in our opinion can be so amended to make it less wide in interpretation and certain wordings may be added to make it workable. It is important for the safeguard of the Moslem minority interest, and should not be treated so lightly as it fared in the hands of the last authors of the Reforms.

MUSSULMANS IN THE ADMINISTRATION.

The question of service is not a question of bread-and-butter, but everywhere in the world public servants are required for guidance and control. It is a source which contributes to the growth of our national prosperity and peace. Hence the struggle for and bitterness about the representation of the Moslems and other communities is not merely that of fishes and loaves, but has got something behind them. In the words of Dr. Shafaat Ahmad Khan, " Whatever the ostensible ' Constitution ' or policy established, a very great deal does, and for decades to come must depend on how and who directs and operates in its actual working. The number of public officials may constitute only a microscopic minority of the total population, yet it is because they are virtual directors of the nation's destiny that Britons and Indians, Hindus and Moslems are competing so eagerly for their due share in them. We are free to acknowledge that the Reforms have, by bringing India face to face with the problem of self-government, precipitated the struggle for powers and emoluments of office and, in fact, for control of the entire machinery of the Government. As the process of withdrawing is steadily in operation, as more and more people new to power come to sway, the more will be the experience and training, the technical skill, and administrative efficiency of officers be effectively used and valued. As we approximate more to swaraj and real self-government, the more will the influence of these guides, philosophers, and friends of the public bodies and leaders increase in the first instance, and the more will there be action and reaction of opinion and actions, public and official."

The time has come when definite ratios be fixed in each service between Hindus and Moslems, because the majority community officers use their " religious fervour to obscure their judgment and prejudice their conduct." In the words of the Governor of Bombay, " a popular minister could not resist the lure of power and patronage to surround himself with a permanent staff recruited almost exclusively from his own community." Failing a fair and frank uncompromising ratio is settled between the two communities and the same is legalised in a parliamentary statute " greatest of all human tyrannies will reign supreme in India, the tyranny of an unmitigated oligarchy of caste or creed over free and democratic Islam." With the full support of Hindu Ministers, executive councillors, office bearers of the local bodies and administrative officers, everything will be done exclusively for the benefit to perpetuate the monopoly of the Hindus. No remedial measures will have a remote chance of success and this will lead to killing the legitimate trade of the minority community by extending advantages and privileges, by giving contracts and state subsidy to the major community's trade.

When we ask for our share in these services, a blunt charge of " slave mentality, selfishness, petty-minded obsessions with bread and butter " is made against us, but if our demand is so mean as described in these words, why does the major community capture all posts and rather wish to die than give a portion of it? In the words of the Governor of Bengal, " Without a larger proportion of Muhammadan officers than now employed the interests of the population as a whole are not likely to be secured. Putting aside the natural reliance of the several communities in officers of their own community in times of tension, the Governor-in-Council considers it inevitable that Muhammadan officers will be in closer touch and sympathy with the needs and aspirations of their community than any other officer." In the words of a Bengali leader, " There was no incentive to bury the hatchet and to put shoulders to the wheels of national or administrative chariots of future India, if any community justly feels that it is being done out of even its minimum share of responsible positions and control of national policies. Bitterness between Hindus and Moslems is fast growing, and will continue to grow as Muhammadans get more and more educated. As Indianisation proceeds and Moslems alone fail to get their due share owing to natural tendencies or unnatural intrigues of Hindu Monopolists, the bitterness will grow." The great Indian leader, the late Mr. C. R. Das, brought about the Bengal Pact and " provided that in his province of Bengal 55 per cent. of the Government posts should go to the Moslems and Mussulmans satisfying the least test should be preferred till the percentage is attained, and after that according to their due proportion subject to this, that for the intervening years a small percentage of posts, say 20 per cent., should go to the Hindus."

The Government of India, through its Home Member, Sir M. Haily, laid down in 1923, by public declaration, that " the definite policy of the Government of India was to prevent the preponderance of any community, caste and creed in the services under its control." Following this, the Bengal Government in 1925 laid down by the order of the Governor in Council, " that in 45 per cent. vacancies filled by direct recruitment, Government reserves the right to appoint Muhammadans alone, provided they possessed the minimum qualifications or secured only the qualifying marks in the competitive tests." In the Bengal secretariat staff, 33 per cent. of all vacancies are reserved for the Moslems and " the very minimum proportion is to be immediately established." The Bombay Government has made it obligatory in all recruitments " a fair proportion to Moslems in the Presidency proper, and 50 per cent. in Sindh." The Madras Government has accepted the policy of giving preference to candidates from communities which have not got a due share of appointments in public service and accepted the proposal of the Muhammadan Staff Selection Board, that in proposing lists of candidates suitable for clerical as well as other appointments in public service, the following percentage should be adopted as a general rule " non-Brahmins, 40 per cent.; Moslems, 20 per cent.; Brahmins, 20 per cent.; Indian Christians and Anglo-Indians, 10 per cent.; Depressed Class and other, 10 per cent." The U.P. Government notified on the 29th May, 1920, that of the six vacancies to be filled in the Provincial Executive Services, two shall go the Moslems." But in our province of C. P. the policy outlined by the Government of India has had no practical effect, as will be seen from the comparative statement given elsewhere.

As early as 1910, the Government of India, in their Resolution (Home Department) N. 1040–58, Simla, the 19th August, 1910, lays down the general conditions, which should govern recruitment for the Provincial Civil Service. The Government of India gave special prominence to this principle while permitting Local Government to frame rules for such recruitment. The very first general condition laid down by the Government of India is that " The rules must be adopted on the one hand to obtain thoroughly efficient candidates, and on the other to secure the representation in the Public Service of the different classes of community." In reply to the Honourable Mr. Subah Rao, who moved a resolution for the appointment of a commission in the Legislative Council of His Excellency the Viceroy, on the 17th March, 1911, the Honourable (then Mr.) Archdale Earle, said that a fair proportion of the offices should be given to the various communities of India.

It is sometimes asserted by politicians of the monopolist class that some communities in India hanker too much after " loaves and fishes " of office. That the importance of a community as well as its happiness depends to a considerable extent on its position in the Public Service of the country is the necessary corollary of India's demand for a larger share of the posts for her sons. What is true of India as a whole is also true of its component parts, namely the communities. But even the problem of " loaves and fishes " is not to be despised of. There are several communities in India, and the Mussulmans are one of them, who were the last to turn to the new education that threw open the doors of office to them. They are, consequently, in most provinces, still behind the Hindus both in English education and in their share in the Public Service, but they are just the people who possessed, and, I believe they possess, great administrative talent and have been for ages most dependent upon Public Service for their maintenance. If you close to them the avenues of the Public Service, you deprive them almost entirely of their means of subsistence.

Now we are faced with the unsatisfactory phenomenon of the big community growing yearly more numerous and at the same time less prosperous; of a community which owing to the instinct and tradition of administration has been excluded more and more ever year from the administration, and of a community which has good ground for tracing misfortunes to an unfavourable condition imposed on it by the British Government. Mussulmans are restless and dissatisfied and the question before the community is to determine in what form their repressed energy subdued by misfortune and threatened by despair should find its vent? It lies within your power to utilise this energy in right quarters. Since we are making steady progress in Western education with a rapid pace, we find a tendency in our rulers, who are under the influence of Hindus, to disregard the real needs of our community. The result is that we, the Moslems, are now growing more conscious than before of the strength of our rights, privileges and claims and yet have confidence of having those recognised by our rulers in India and in England, simply because their resistance to a good deal of injustice tacitly tolerated has not been as great as that of politically speaking more forward and assertive communities. The Government and the English have not yet realised the menace lurking calmly behind the situation. Both as a measure of justice and of political expediency it is necessary to allow the Mussulmans, specially in these provinces, in which they are still very backward, an opportunity of coming into line with other communities. This is no favouritism, but the only practical form of fair play. I admit that the system proposed, which will solve the tangle, is not so easy as an open competition, but no solution of our difficulties is likely to possess the merit of simplicity, for the problem is one of the most complex that has ever cried out for a speedy solution. Where else do we find a parallel to the India of to-day, whose population consists in the main of peoples, two of which cannot touch the third, and when such ordinary social relationship as inter-dining and inter-marriage are considered sinful. Where else do we meet with such a variety of communal talents, virtues and failings? Nowhere except in India the 20th, 15th, 10th and the 5th centuries exist side by side! India is a country of contrast, few rules can be made applicable to her generally without doing injustice to a vast number of persons and even retarding her general progress. It is often said that the Mussulmans claim special treatment, but it will be proved to you that we are not allowed to win our bare proportion in the Public Service of the country and there is no dearth of well qualified candidates among us. No doubt we are seeking for justice and not for favouritism. We do not want to lower the standard of service. Our only claim is that so long as we do not get our proper share in the service of the country, our candidates, possessing the minimum qualification for Government service, should be given preference over those of other communities.

Convention, pact or official circulars will not help us in either securing the fixed ratio, or if we try to do so the already Hinduised secretariat will whittle them down in actual working. In 1901 the Secretary to the Government had to condemn the machinations of the subtle and expert Hindu monopolist in a fresh order: "Notwithstanding the distinct order of the Government on the subject only 26 out of 382 teachers in Government service were Muhammadans. Inspectors of schools should adhere to the degrees laid down and not to give preference to a Hindu possessing a higher degree, which is not an essential qualification for the vacancy." We therefore want our position and ratio of 25 per cent. Moslems in all services, either Government or of Local bodies, and this be embodied in the Parliamentary statute and nothing less. The present atmosphere of the country is surcharged with racial and communal rivalry and this is keener for services in the State. Mussulman servants are being dismissed and discharged one after another from the local bodies. If no charge can be made against them, the retrenchment plea is the safest of all. In the Government service an organised propaganda is set on foot to disgrace the Moslem servants. Owing to mutual distrust the administration is not inspiring that confidence which is badly needed at a time when the feelings of the two great communities are badly strained. There have been so many riots recently in our province, but the riot at Nagpur and the way it was handled have created an atmosphere of suspicion and distrust, and intensified the Moslem feelings against the Hinduised administration.

Not only the Hindus have monopolised all the services but they cannot also see the few Moslems still in some departments. Moslem officials are passing through very trying times. Hindu public is levelling bitterest criticism against their administration, as their (Mussulmans) subordinates are Hindus who also try to discredit them and their character at every step. Organised agitation is followed by meetings and violent press propaganda. The council is flooded with questions, Hindu Secretariat and the press with appeals. The Moslem officials are, therefore, in a most humiliating position. Their (Moslems) superiors are Hindus and the Local Government, with Hindu ministers and executive Councillors influenced by this subtle propaganda, is apt to dismiss or reduce them from the office they occupy. The main object of this propaganda is to eliminate the Moslems from the Service. We therefore want an effective check over this and a safeguard for the Moslem servants. We want a guarantee before we can consent to leap into the dark. When the effect on the service of the transferred subjects has been so disastrous for Moslems, and when the Hindus have not only monopolised the transferred alone, but also have influenced the Reserved half, we are afraid that whatever we have to-day will be taken away from us to-morrow. We had the bitterest experience of the Hindu monopolists. All countries in Europe have made provisions for safeguarding the rights of the minorities in the Services and we claim only what is conceded to others in similar circumstances. We want a guarantee for the future, and that should be laid down in the Parliamentary statute and in the constitution of the country, so that nobody may touch it here. The "Efficiency" theory is propped by the Hindus to meet their own ends. We should not be sacrificed on the altar of this bogus theory, but our demand of 25 per cent. representatives be embodied in the Parliamentary statute.

Now I wish to take department after department, and would like to show how the majority community has usurped all the powers and monopolised all posts in the province.

Indian Civil Service. The posts held by the Indians in Civil Service are divided on the scale of pay into :—

(1) Select grade on superior scale on a scale of Rs1,000 to Rs2,500 excluding the oversea allowance. As these posts are in major numbers held by non-Indians they are left out of consideration for the purpose of comparison.

(2) We take the Inferior Scale posts on a time scale pay of Rs450 to Rs1,350, excluding the oversea allowance. There are 11 Indians holding these posts for 12 years and below. Out of these 11, there are 10 Hindus drawing Rs8,010 per month. There is only one Moslem getting Rs850 a month. There are nine Indian officers though not I.C.S. Out of them 7 are Hindus drawing Rs14,250 per month as against two Mussulmans drawing Rs3275.

Provincial Civil Service. The Provincial Service comprises of two distinct branches :

(i) The Executive and

(ii) The Judicial.

Executive. Appointments to the executive branch are made in rare cases by promotion from the subordinate Civil Service, or occasionally from other departments, and mostly direct recruitment is made every year. Here the selection committee plays an important part—the required candidates are recommended by it and nominated by the Local Government. They should be graduates, who can speak Hindi or Mahratti. There are 108 posts of Extra Assistant Commissioners, out of which 105 on a time scale pay of Rs300 to 850 p.m. Then there is a selected grade with a time scale pay of Rs900 to Rs1,100 p.m. There are 74 Hindus drawing Rs36,400 and 27 Mussulmans drawing Rs14,430.

The Subordinate Civil Service. The subordinate Civil Service, which is a branch of executive, recruits candidates from among the natives of the province. There are 114 posts for Tahsildars, out of which four are on a select grade of Rs300 to 350 p.m. and the remaining 110 on an ordinary scale of Rs175 to Rs275 p.m. The total strength according to the Civil List is as follows :—

114 Hindus drawing Rs24,675 p.m., and 29 Muhammadans drawing Rs7,600 p.m. (These figures include officiating officers in place of those who are on leave and those who are on deputation.) There are 118 Naib Tahsildars exclusive of "Probationers." 92 are Hindus drawing Rs11,030 and 26 Moslems drawing Rs2,830 p.m.

Judicial. The Judicial branch of administration as now constituted consists of Sub-Judges and Munsiffs. Candidates for Judicial Service are appointed on the recommendation of the Judicial Commissioner, who is assisted by a selection committee. The candidate must be either a barrister-at-law or a graduate-in-law, and be able to speak Mahratti or Hindi. The time scale pay is Rs300 to 850 p.m. with four select grade posts on Rs900 to 1,200 p.m. There are 49 Sub-Judges and 74 Munsiffs. Out of these 117 are Hindus drawing Rs75,000 and 6 Moslems drawing Rs2,910 p.m. For the administration of Civil Justice there are 11 District Judges in addition to the above. Eight District Judges are Hindus, and to our despair we note that there is not a single Moslem who has been found fit by our Hinduised rulers to hold the office. Among the Small Cause Court Judges, we find no Moslems as against six Hindus. The Court of the Judicial Commissioner has, after a long expectation and delay, got one solitary Mussulman. The hopelessly poor number of the Moslem officers in the Judicial branch is deplorable and we feel rightly that in the matter of appointment in this department pure and simple injustice has been and is being done to our community. It is not the question of bread and butter, but it is a question of power, prestige and influence. We cannot, therefore see our community kicked out of the Judiciary—we protest against this "Hindu-Raj." The Hindus have concentrated their energy and established their "Raj" authority, and the Moslems, who are 582,032 in number (in this province), have only six officers in this department. How can justice be expected in so intensified communal surcharged atmosphere? In the clerical staff of the different courts and offices the position of the Moslems is the most deplorable; it is but natural that the Hindu Munsarims, Superintendents, Head Clerks and Judges recruit for their clerical staff members of their own caste. Indeed it is purely a Mahratta department. We, therefore, strongly press that 25 per cent. of the posts in the J.C.'s Court, in all Judgeships, Ministerial staff and Clerical staff, should be given to the Moslems. Not only the present Hindu monopoly be done away with, but also in future 25 per cent. of all the vacancies be reserved for Moslems, who should be selected from among the Moslem candidates.

The Secretariat. There are two Executive Councillors, two Ministers and a Governor, among whom the portfolios of different departments are distributed. Ever since the Reforms, there never has been any Mussulman as Minister or as an Executive Councillor, except once for a brief period of a month or two as a Minister. When the Moslem Minister was appointed, the Hindu majority sent him away in no time. Leaving the I.C.S. Secretaries, who are mostly Europeans, all the under secretaries are Hindus. In the Ministerial staff Mussulmans are few and on unimportant posts. The Hindus have monopolised the real power and authority.

Administration of Law (Reserved). Beside the Deputy Commissioners, Extra Assistant Commissioners, Tahsildars and Naib-Tahsildars (who have been already dealt with) there are other important officers, who demand our attention. Tahsils are divided into Patwari's Circles. Each circle consists of several villages. Three or four circles are grouped together and placed under a Revenue Inspector. This is done so to keep record of land, hence the Land Record Department. The Revenue Inspectors are supervised by the Assistant Superintendents of Land Record, who are under a District Superintendent of Land Record. The head of the Department is the Director of Land Record, who is also the Commissioner of Settlement. The Commissioner of the Division controls the "Court of Wards." This court takes charge of the affairs of the owners of large estates, which cannot be managed by them on account of "age," "sex," or other disabilities. Our position in these departments is rather disappointing. Out of seventy-one posts held by Indians, sixty-three are held by Hindus, getting Rs9,345 p.m. and eight by Moslems getting only Rs990 p.m. This is the condition in the gazetted posts. In the lower rung of the ladder the position is still more pitiable. The number of the Moslem Patwaris is ridiculously small. It is the Patwari who plays a very prominent part in rural areas. In the "Settlement Department" the same tale of Hindu monopoly is to be repeated. Out of eighteen gazetted posts there are fifteen Hindus (on Rs6,735 p.m.) and three Moslems (on Rs695 p.m.)

Administration of Justice. In the beginning of the chapter we have dealt with the Criminal and Civil Court Officials. The position of the Moslems, suffice it to say, is quite hopeless. There are eleven Civil Districts. At the headquarters of each there is a District and Sessions Judge. Where the work is heavy an additional District and Sessions Judge is posted. To our surprise we find not a single post given to any Moslem. Is it not a shameful state of affairs that a community is elbowed out from these high offices and Hindus have monopolised them to the extreme? The duties of a Sessions Judge are of far-reaching consequence. In such a communal surcharged atmosphere, when so many riot cases are trumped up for trial, is it not a matter of grave concern that Mussulmans should be forced to be tried and sentenced by a Hindu Sessions Judge, who is not above communal feelings? In fact, the life and property of Mussulmans is in danger. I do not mean that all the Hindu officers and judges are partial, but what I want is that justice must be above reproach. How can a community like ours, that is kicked right and left by Hindus, have faith in Hindus and expect justice without any misgivings, especially when knowing that they (judges) are from the same community who has dragged them to the Court in that pitiable condition? The position is most serious, and I earnestly pray that this should be done away with.

Benches of the Honorary Magistrates have been favoured, in important towns and villages, with first, second, and third-class powers usually for a successive period of five years. Few Honorary Magistrates exercise powers sitting singly. About one-fourth of the total cases are disposed of by them. A complete list of the number of the magistrates is given in the Appendix, where a comparison has been made of Moslems with other communities. The appointment of these Magistrates is made not on any academic qualification, nor is it based on any efficiency quality, but it is simply the will of the Government which makes and unmakes these highly-powered personages styled as Honorary Magistrates. When the atmosphere is surcharged with the ideal of the Hindu Raj, the local government must also be influenced by the same view. To pass his term of office comfortably and with ease H.E. the Governor has to placate the Hindu sentiment. Hence, the injustice to the Moslem minority. When the Secretariat is full of a particular community, when continuously the Home member and Ministers belong to that favoured class, and when the Executive is under the thumb of the majority, nothing can be expected from the English officers, also, even though they wish to do justice to the minority. Tales from the Judicial Commissioners' Court to the third class Magistrate is the same of Hindu monopoly. There are three districts, Seoni, Hoshangabad, and Bilaspore with two Mussulman Honorary Magistrates, as against thirteen Hindus. In Jubbulpore, Chindwara, and Yeotmal there are only three Mussulmans (in each) against seventeen Hindus in Jubbulpore, seven in Chhindwara, and nineteen in Yeotmal. There are two districts, Drug and Balaghat, in which not a single Mussulman is to be found as an Honorary Magistrate. In Damoh, Betul, and Mandla there is one Mussulman as against ten Hindus in Damoh, five in Betul and four in Mandla. In twenty-two districts of this province there are five hundred and eighteen Honorary Magistrates—eighty-seven Mussulmans and four hundred and twenty-six Hindus. As regards the powers these magistrates enjoy, it is not surprising that majority of Mussulman magistrates have been invested with third class powers; first and second class powers are mostly enjoyed by Hindus. Not content with the numbers, they have been shrewd enough to usurp all the powers. In this connection there is only one aspect of the question worth consideration. The magistrates of this class do not belong to the permanent service, whose activities can be controlled and guided by their superiors, but they are from among the commoners ; therefore they cannot be expected to be above the party and communal outlook. To expect justice with communal prejudice and bias from them is to ask for the moon. Except the power of appeal, which petty litigants are not expected to exercise, Government has very little control over these Courts.

Not only the system of recruitment requires complete overhauling, but also the Moslem ratio must be fixed for each district.

Registration (Transferred). Offices for the registration of documents have been established and they are in charge of Sub-Registrars. There are 119 Sub-Registrars, on a scale of pay of Rs60 to Rs175. There are ten ex-officio registering officers ; Hindu monopoly reigns supreme in this department. No provision has been made for Mussulmans. They are nowhere found except such as can be counted on fingers. There are four Moslem Inspectors of Registration drawing Rs1,160 p.m., and the rest are Hindus. It is a simple and pure Hindu department.

Law Department (Reserved). The Law Officer of the Local Government is the Legal Remembrancer, also Secretary to the Local Government on the Legal Department and Secretary to the Legislative Council. The Assistant Legal Remembrancer is the Government Advocate, who is also the ex-officio, Standing Counsel and Public Prosecutor. Though one of the Law Officers is a Hindu, yet not a single Moslem is to be found among them. There are seven Hindu Public Prosecutors as against two Mussulmans. For the Magisterial Courts Police provides the ordinary prosecuting agency. Mostly Hindu lawyers are engaged. Because of the English element, the Hindu Raj has not been established in this department, but wherever Indians are appointed Hindus jump in, and the result is progressive Hinduisation. It is earnestly appealed that Moslem position be definitely fixed to avoid Hindu monopoly.

Police (Reserved). Except the posts of Inspector General and his deputy, who are Europeans, there are three Hindus and two Moslem District Superintendents of Police. Out of three Indian Assistant Superintendents of Police, not a single one is a Mussulman. Among the Deputy Superintendents of Police (Provincial Service), ten are Hindus and six are Moslems. As to Circle Inspectors, eighty-one are Hindus and forty-eight Moslems. We may briefly state here why justice has been done to us in this department. It is the only department in which Mussulmans are found in such a number. " It is because Hindus as a class are considered, and are really unsuitable for Police duties, and only the members of the martial race are recruited and selection is based on other grounds than those of mere literacy and bookishness, which are the prerogative of some of the clerical castes of the Hindus. Robust health, good physique and proficiency in sports are considered as a sine qua non for the Police Service."

But systematic and persistent effort is being made to oust the Moslems from the Police Service, therefore, in the Subordinate Service, Mussulmans are being reduced in number. Attempts are also being made to blacken their personal diary, so that they may not have any chance of promotion. In spite of " their glorious achievements, fine records and unsurpassed devotion," campaign of vilification against the Moslem Kotwals and other officials is already set on foot, every effort is made by the Hindus to monopolise this department. What will be the fate of " Law and Order "—God forbid !—when Hindu Raj is established in this Department ? It can be better imagined than described.

Jail (Reserved). The Inspector General of Prisons, who is an Officer of the I.M.S., controls this department. There are two central, nine subsidiary and ten District Jails in the province. Out of two officers who are Indians (drawing Rs1,600 p.m.) not one is a Mussulman. As regards Jailors, against 11 Hindus (Pay Rs2,350), there are only three Moslems (Pay Rs470 p.m.). Figures for the Subordinate staff are not available, but Moslems are few, and their percentage is low. It will not be out of place if it is mentioned here, that Moslems, who are under trial and kept in jails under custody, are not given mutton. They are made vegetarian.

Forest (Reserved). The head of the department is the Chief Conservator, under whom there are three Conservators. Under them are the Divisional Forest Officers, who are either Deputy or Assistant Conservators in the grade of the Provincial Service. Divisions are divided into Ranges in charge of Rangers, with Deputy Rangers, Foresters and Forest Guards. Figures for non-gazetted officers are not available, but in the gazetted rank there are sixty-two Hindus and 10 Moslems (Pay Rs14,740 and Rs3,220 p.m. respectively). It is most essential that 25 per cent. seats of all candidates be reserved for Moslems undergoing training at the Imperial Forest College, Dehra Dun, for appointment in the Provincial Service and Forest College Coimbatore and the Provincial School at Balaghat for the posts of Ranger and Deputy Ranger.

Local and Municipal Administration (Transferred). Public Instruction (Transferred).—These two departments and position of Moslems in them are dealt with in separate chapters.

Excise (Transferred). The head of the Department is the Excise Commissioner, who is aided by a Distillery Expert and a Superintendent of Excise. In each district there is a District Excise Officer. The district is divided into Circles, each under a Sub-Inspector, with two or three peons to aid him. Besides this, there is an establishment at distilleries and warehouses. The position of Moslems in this department is as bad as in others. There are thirty-five Hindus and three Moslems drawing Rs.97675 and Rs520 p.m. respectively. This is a transferred subject, which has been successively under Hindu Ministers and the Hindu officials in the Secretariat. The result has been proved disastrous to the Moslem community. The above noted figures are for the gazetted officers. The position of the Moslems in the non-gazetted posts is still unspeakably bad. We are nowhere seen in this department. It is completely Hinduised. If immediate steps are not taken to break the monopoly, those of the few Moslems will be replaced by the majority community in the department.

Public Works Department (Transferred). (a) Roads Buildings, Bridges, etc.—Roads, buildings, bridges, etc., under the P. W. D., are controlled by a Chief Engineer, who is also the Secretary to the Government in his department. He is assisted by an Under Secretary who is generally a Senior Executive Engineer. The province is divided into Circles, each under a Superintendent Engineer, each circle is divided into divisions under an Executive Engineer, and each division into sub-divisions under a Sub-Divisional Officer, under whom are upper and lower subordinates. This department being under successive Hindu Ministers, has been also Hinduised to the core. Out of seven Indians holding the posts of Superintendent Engineers and Executive Engineers drawing Rs7,700 p.m. not a single one is Mussulman, all are Hindus. Out of twenty-five Assistant Engineers, two are Moslems, with the pay of Rs660 p. m. as against twenty-three Hindus drawing Rs10,671 p.m. There are eighty-two Hindu Sub-Engineers drawing Rs10,761 p.m. and eight Moslems drawing Rs1061 p.m. The position of the Moslems in the upper and lower Subordinate Service is still much more pitiable.

(b.) Irrigation. This branch is under the Chief Engineer, who is also the Secretary to the Government. He is assisted by a Senior Executive Engineer as an Under-Secretary with a similar organization of Circles, Divisions and Sub-Divisions. The posts are filled by the Indian Service Engineers, Engineers in the Provincial Service, and below them are upper and lower Subordinate Services. The position of the Moslems in this branch is far more deplorable than in any transferred subject. Out of five Executive Engineers, four are Hindus (pay Rs3,000 p.m.), and one is a Moslem (pay Rs675 p.m.). As for Assistant Engineers, 19 are Hindus (pay Rs7,490 p.m.). There is not a single Moslem. The position among the Sub-Engineers is equally bad. There are 101 Hindus drawing Rs12,560 p.m. against four Moslems, drawing Rs550 p.m. Out of five Revenue Establishment Deputy Collectors (Pay Rs1,865 p.m.) there is not a single Moslem. Out of 27 Inspectors, 26 are Hindus (Pay Rs3,355 p.m.) and one Moslem (pay Rs120 p.m.). There are two temporary Engineers (drawing Rs1,850 p.m.). Both are Hindus.

The above detailed account of the P.W.D. gives an idea how the Hinduisation of the department has been completely made. The handful of Moslems who are seen there will be no more if the process is allowed to go on and prompt steps are not taken to stop it. The chief reason for such a small number of Moslems in these departments is the policy pursued in the different Engineering Colleges and Schools. We therefore press that 25 per cent. seats for students of colleges and schools should be reserved for the Moslems. The competitive examination for admission should be stopped and if continued the percentage for Moslems be reserved and the Moslem students be taken out of the Moslem candidates only. The Hindu monopoly for each department should be at once done away with; Moslem teachers in the staff of the Engineering Schools and Colleges be appointed, and 25 per cent. ratio for the Moslems be fixed in the upper and lower subordinate service.

Medical Relief and Public Health (Transferred). Under the Minister of Medical Relief and Public Health is the Inspector General for Civil Hospitals. For each district there is a Civil Surgeon, who is also the representative of the District Public Health Department. Where there is no Central Jail, he supplies the place of the Superintendent of Jail. Under him there are Assistant and Sub-Assistant Surgeons. Moslems are few in these all-important departments. There is one Indian in the Imperial Service. He is a Hindu on Rs2,750 p.m. In the Provincial Medical Service there are 46 Hindus (pay Rs13,825 p.m.) and five Moslems drawing Rs1,230 p.m. In the Public Health branch, there is not a single Mussulman, though there are two Hindus in gazetted rank. Not only the Medical and Public Health departments are being Hinduised, but effort is also made to keep Moslems away from the Medical Schools and Colleges. Under the plea of the test Examinations, Moslems are rigidly excluded from them. It is, therefore, essential that the percentage of Mussulmans in the Schools and Colleges be fixed and a fixed number of Moslems having minimum qualification be taken, along with this further recruitment of Hindus be stopped and serious efforts be made to give 25 per cent. of all posts to Mussulmans. In this way our community can stand against the majority community. The above stated is the condition in the upper grade. Position of the Mussulmans in the rural and urban dispensaries, which are under the charge of the Sub-Assistant Surgeons (L.M.P.) is the most distressing. In short, the Medical and Health departments seem to have been made reserve for Hindus. This department of all others depends entirely upon the confidence, goodwill, and trust of all the communities, but it has been and is Hinduised to its utmost. In these days when Hindu-Moslem riots are an everyday affair, the treatment to the Moslem victims meted out can be better imagined than described. The high position these Medical Officers enjoy before a court in police evidence is well-known. It is, therefore, sheer injustice that Hindus have been allowed to monopolise the department. The argument is not that Hindu Medical men are generally dishonest or partial in their duties, but what I want to impress with all emphasis at my command is, that this monopoly does no good to the profession or to the department. It is pure and unalloyed injustice to allow one community to capture all posts and usher out the other important community.

Agriculture (Transferred). This is another department which has been Hinduised. Here the "Shuddhi" is in full swing. In the Indian Agriculture Service out of two posts held by Indians, both are occupied by Hindus (Pay Rs1,050 p.m.). Out of 18 Provincial posts 17 are held by Hindus (pay Rs6,300 p.m.). There is only one Moslem (drawing Rs425 p.m.). In the subordinate service there are two Muhammadans (pay Rs245 p.m.) as against 55 Hindus drawing Rs7,885 p.m. With a Hindu Minister and Hindu Officials this is a purely Hindu Department. The state of affairs in the Agriculture College is the same. Moslems have no chance of admittance into the college either as students or as members of staff. If there are few students, attention is not paid to them.

Civil Veterinary Department (Transferred). Mussulmans in this department are not so badly off as in others, but Hindus are on the offensive. As long as candidates were recruited from Lahore College, where the medium of instruction is Urdu, some Moslems could come forth, but now the majority community is putting forth its candidates. In the Provincial Service there are four Hindus and two Moslems drawing Rs1,420 and Rs575 p.m. respectively. In the Subordinate Service there are 11 Hindus and four Moslems (pay Rs2,000 and Rs650 p.m. respectively). In the case of Veterinary Assistants the ratio of Moslems is not fair.

Industries ("Reserved" and "Transferred"). This department has been divided into "Reserved" and "Transferred." Factory, Boilers, Electricity Inspectors, the prevention of smoke nuisance, and the investigation of labour problems are under the "Reserved" group. Companies, Development of Industries, Technical and Industrial Education are under the "Transferred" side. The Director of Industries is the head of the department. He is also the Registrar of Co-operative Societies. He is assisted by an Advisory Board of twenty members, of whom five are officials and nine council members. His staff consists of a Chief Inspector, two Inspectors of Boilers, one Electrical Adviser, a Textile Expert, a Leather Expert, and Inspector of Industrial Schools, a senior Inspector of Factories, and a Commercial Agent. The department controls seven schools of handicrafts and Reformatory School at Jubbulpore. The Museum at Nagpur is also under it with a curator and a coin expert. This department is also a stronghold of Hindus. Their monopoly is complete. In the whole department there are only two Moslems (pay Rs740). Not content with the staff, they have completely Hinduised all the seven schools. They are maintained for the exclusive benefit of the majority community. All the teachers are Hindus. It is seldom and with great difficulty that Moslem students are admitted.

Co-operative Societies (Transferred). This department like others has been successively under a Hindu Minister. It is no wonder if we note that it has been Hinduised. Out of three Registrars, one is a Moslem—he has been deputed to this department—and two are Hindus (pay Rs850 and Rs1,300 p.m. respectively). All the Circle Officers are Hindus. There are 35 Hindu Auditors—Pay Rs4,365 and two Moslem Auditors (pay Rs255 p.m. respectively).

Income Tax (Central). It is a central subject controlled by the Board of Inland Revenue. The Local Government has nothing to do with it, except in the appointment of Income-Tax Commissioner and Assistant Commissioners. It is under a Commissioner, who is assisted by two Assistant Commissioners, 13 Officers, 12 Inspectors, 6 Examiners and 25 Sub-Inspectors. Though at the top there is a Muhammadan, yet under him we find all Hindus except two or three Moslems. The Moslems here are no better off. In all there are two Moslems and 28 Hindu gazetted officers drawing Rs2,780 and Rs11,875 p.m. respectively. It is said that it is a Muhammadan department, since its head is a Moslem, but the Hindu clique majority and monopoly can better be imagined than pointed on paper, when one takes into consideration the above figures and the number of these who are non-gazetted officers.

Audit Department. It is a purely Hindu department. Out of five Indians holding office, there is not a single Moslem.

Post and Telegraph. In this department out of six Indians, five are Hindus drawing Rs2,755 p.m. as against one Moslem (pay Rs350 p.m.). In the account section there is not a single Moslem, though there are three Hindus drawing Rs2,230 p.m.

Such is the pitiable condition of the Moslems in different departments. Hindu monopoly reigns supreme on the "Transferred" side, and they have succeeded in making successful onslaught on the "Reserved" Half. If this state of affairs be continued to go on, Mussulmans will be nowhere in the Public Service and the result will be that the next decade we will be classed among other "Gonds" and "Bhils" of the country. Thus history will repeat itself. It is therefore imperative that our rights, privileges and claims be safeguarded in the proposed constitution of the country by the British Parliament and that we be allowed to enjoy our share in directing and controlling the destiny of our nation through thick and thin. Our demands in brief therefore are:—

(1) The recruitment of Hindus be stopped in all departments which they have monopolised at present, and 75 per cent. posts be given to Moslems, till their ratio of 25 per cent. is reached in each branch of service.
(2) Moslem candidates possessing minimum qualification be taken from among the Moslem applicants.
(3) Certain number of seats may be reserved in Agricultural, Engineering, Medical and other vocational institutions.
(4) A European Official, with the duty of keeping a list of Moslems who satisfy the minimum qualifications laid down by the Public Service Commission, should be appointed. He is to be assisted by a Moslem Advisory Board. No appointment is to be given to other community unless the Moslem candidate is not forthcoming either directly or departmentally. This is essential, because the already Hinduised offices and their heads destroy or tamper with the application of the Moslem candidates.
(5) Ratio and proportion of Moslems in different departments be fixed in Parliamentary Statute. H. E. the Governor be instructed to carry out the same within a few years. No legislature or executive order should be allowed to touch it.

It may be noted that we will not accept any constitution if it does not guarantee our representation in the Public Services of the country in the ratio mentioned above. If without the above as fundamental safeguard any constitution is imposed on us, we will oppose it tooth and nail.

MUSSULMANS IN LOCAL BODIES.

Aim of the present Memorandum is not to show you what the Local Bodies are, what are their functions, and what are the amenities of life which are enjoyed through them. Suffice it to say that Local Bodies are almost democratised in our Provinces. The control of the officials is almost nominal. In fact there is full swaraj as far as the Local Bodies are concerned. In the Government Report: "Wide financial powers, an electorate on a liberalised franchise designed to comprise at least 5 per cent. of the population, an increase in the proportion of elected members, the practical elimination of official members and relaxation of official control, mark a very wide advance." When the above noted changes took place the Government said, "It was perhaps not surprising that the public should in the past have been apathetic towards local bodies which were criticised on the ground that they were too dependent upon Government and too limited in the duties entrusted to them to arouse real enthusiasm; the new Acts greatly extend the scope and importance of the Local Bodies and their independence of official control, and this grant of wider responsibilities should do much to dispel the present apathy of the Local Electorates."

The control of the Deputy Commissioner has been, as laid down under the new Act in force, confined to the examination of proceedings, inspection of immovable property or works in progress, inspection of documents and the right to require the submission of statements, accounts and reports. The Commissioner's control over the Municipal committees is almost nil, though in the case of the District Councils he receives reports from the Deputy Commissioners.

What was expected of these bodies was that they should be honest, efficient, and impartial in the discharge of their duties. They should not set at naught the wishes of a linguistic or religious minority. Their expectations have not been, we are sorry to say, fulfilled. It is not required of me to tell whether they have been efficient and honest, but one thing I will say, that neither have they been impartial nor have they respected the needs and wishes of the Moslem minority. There have been attempts innumerable and in actual working at some places they have been abusing their power. It has been an object lesson to us. No one would plead for unlimited power or limitless power to be given to these local bodies. But I would like to explain my attitude towards this intricate question that it may not be misunderstood. I, therefore, say that if a local body acts efficiently and honestly within the sphere of work committed to its charge, and so long as the rights of racial, linguistic and religious minorities are respected, it should be left free from interference by the Government, and its autonomy should be scrupulously respected, its privileges should be inviolate and its powers should not be impaired.

The District Councils and Local Boards of these provinces are governed by the Local Self-Government Act of 1920 and the Municipal Committees by the Act of 1922. These Acts gave them almost complete autonomy. We have to see how Moslems have been treated under these Acts by the bodies thus created.

Let us first examine the population of Mussulmans in these provinces. According to the last census Mussulmans live mostly in cities. Following figures will bear testimony to the above statement :—

	No. of persons per mile.
Total population ..	90
Hindus	86
Mussulmans	414
Christians	324
Jains	300
Parsees	847

The above will show that Mussulmans form a comparatively large proportion of the urban population. In the following towns Mussulmans form twenty to fifty per cent. of the population :—

Though in no town Mussulmans have majority over Hindus in the whole of C.P. and Berar, yet they are practically equal in number; no doubt weak in actual voting strength in one or two towns. In other towns, as shown above, Mussulmans form twenty per cent. to thirty per cent. of the population. As the Mussulmans have not the guarantee of the separate election, and have to stand in the same election booths and under joint electorate without reservation of seats, they have fared very badly. Ratio of Mussulmans in the rural area is not that of towns. In the villages they are few and in small number. It is in towns that resources of our civilization are concentrated and chief brains of the community are supplied from the towns. All the economic, social, and religious movements are born in the towns, and fortunately in the towns we are living in greater number. In spite of all this we have suffered tremendously under these two Acts. By not giving us the separate electorate, the Acts deprived us of our representation.

If we are accused of communal feelings, let us see what our Hindus have done where they are in minorities. The Punjabee of Lahore wrote, in 1911: "The fact that in Wazirabad the Muhammadans considerably outnumber the Hindus and the Sikhs combined is no justification for permanently placing the Hindus and the Sikhs in a position of utter dependence and subordination in the municipal committee. Mere numerical strength, we have stated, is no standard by which to determine the extent of the representation. To place an important community permanently in such a position as almost to eliminate its representation is certainly an irritating proceeding." We make a present of these remarks of a Hindu paper to his co-religionist and C. P. and Berar with the hope that they would apply them to the case of C.P. and Berar, where the Mussulmans are "in a position of utter dependence and subordination" in local bodies, and "an important community" is being placed "in such a position as almost to eliminate its representation." The demand of the Mussulmans is not that the minority should be converted into a majority. They would be satisfied if the minority is made more substantial in local bodies, on the basis of proportion to the total population. But in itself the concession asked for is a trifle and we are not sure that it will help Mussulmans much. Even then, they would be but in minority and will depend on the goodwill of the Hindu majority. It would be by courting the friendship of the Hindus rather than hostility that the Mussulmans will be able to safeguard their interests. But there is not still enough magnanimity in the majority even to concede this trifle. Shylock was asked to show mercy, but replied that it was not in the bond, and insisted on having his pound of flesh.

Probably in C.P. nobody cares to know that there had been pledges continuously made by the Government that there should be separate representation for the Mussulmans not only in the Legislatures, Imperial and Provincial, but also in local bodies. In fact, these pledges have been treated by our Hindu brethren as mere scraps of paper and the local bodies of these provinces enjoy the Hindu Raj pure and simple under the so-called joint electorate. On the memorable 1st October, 1906, Lord Minto gave a "Pledge" at Simla which is as emphatic as it is clear. The Mussulmans, in their address, had stated as follows:—

> "As Municipal and District Boards have to deal with important local interests, affecting to a great extent the health, comfort, educational needs and even the religious concerns of the inhabitants, we shall, we hope, be pardoned if we solicit for a moment your Excellency's attention to the position of Muhammadans thereon before passing to higher concerns. These institutions form, as it were, the initial rungs in the ladder of self-government, and it is here that the principle of representation is brought more intimately to the intelligence of the people. Yet the position of Muhammadans on these Boards is not at present regulated by any guiding principle of general application, and practice varies in different localities.
> "We would, therefore, respectfully suggest that local authority should, in every case, be required to declare the number of Hindus and Muhammadans entitled to seats on Municipal and District Boards, such proportion to be determined in accordance with the numerical strength, social status, local influence and special requirements of either community. Once their relative proportion is authoritatively determined, we would suggest that either community should be allowed severally to return their own representatives."

In reply to the above, the "Pledge" given by Lord Minto is as follows:—

> "The pith of your address, as I understand it, is the claim that in any system of representation whether it affects a Municipality, a District Board or a Legislative Council in which it is proposed to introduce or increase an electoral organisation, the Muhammadan community should be represented as a community. You point out that in many cases electoral bodies as now constituted cannot be expected to return a Muhammadan candidate, and that if by any chance they did so, it could only be at the sacrifice of such a candidate's views to those of a majority opposed to his own community, whom he would in no way represent, and you justly claim that your position should be estimated not merely on your numerical strength, but in respect to the political importance of your community and the service it has rendered to the Empire. I am entirely in accord with you. Please do not misunderstand me; I make no attempt to indicate by what means the representation of communities can be obtained, but I am as firmly convinced as I believe you to be that any electoral representation in India would be doomed to mischievous failure which aimed at granting a personal enfranchisement regardless of the beliefs and traditions of the communities composing the population of this continent. The mass of the people of India have no knowledge of representative institution. I agree with you gentlemen, that the initial rungs in the ladder of self-government are to be found in the Municipal and District Boards and that it is in that direction that we must look for the gradual political education of the people.

The above was in 1906, and in 1911, H.E. Lord Hardinge, the then Viceroy of India, in reply to the address of the Punjab Moslem League, said : " You may rest assured that pledges once given by Government will not be broken."

As Lord Minto has said, in 1906, he made no attempt to indicate by what means Moslem representation could be obtained. It was not till three years that the Royal Decentralisation Commission held by an almost unanimous opinion that the interests of minorities should be secured by methods different from those which had till then been in force. The Commission wrote, in paragraph 789 of its report, that :—

" As regards the methods of election, we are in entire accord with the resolutions of 1882, as to the impossibility of laying down any general system and the desirability of trying different schemes in different localities, including methods of proportional representation and elections by castes and occupations, etc. Having regard to the different circumstances of different areas, we think it essential that the system adopted in each should be such as to provide for the due representation of different communities, creeds and interests. It has always been recognised that it is the duty of the British Administration to protect the interests of the various communities in India and to secure impartial treatment to all. Moreover, in the cognate matter of the selection of members for Legislative Councils the discussion which resulted in the passing of the Indian Councils Acts of 1892 embodied the emphatic testimony, not merely of distinguished Anglo-Indian officials, but of British statesmen as to the necessity for securing special representation of Muhammadan and other minorities and so to the danger of allowing undue predominance to any one caste."

In other words, a Commission appointed by His Majesty on the advice of so liberal a minister as Lord Morley, and composed of some of the most broadminded officials and non-official members, confirmed the testimony of distinguished Anglo-Indian officials and British statesmen, with only a half-hearted dissent of the late Mr. R. C. Dutt, who considered the system of Government nomination to help minorities a wise exercise of power, and could not say anything more against the views of his colleagues than that " Separate election by castes and creeds is not known elsewhere in the British Empire," and that the people of India had generally been taught " to ignore distinctions of caste and creed in civic life." With reference to this, we only regret that while the predominant majority is fully cognisant of the educative value of municipal elections and wishes to avail itself of them, one of its most distinguished members, now, unfortunately, no more, still considered the system of Government nominations sufficiently helpful for the minorities. Had the people of India learnt the lessons of British rule, like apt pupils, and in practice forgotten distinctions of caste and creed, there would have been no need of Government nominations to help minorities, which, unlike most minorities in other parts of the British Empire, are less numerous communities out-voted for the simple reason of differing from the majority in caste or religious belief. This shows that the conditions of India are almost unparalleled anywhere else in the British Empire, and our evils being different there need be no hesitation in providing remedies not known elsewhere in the British Empire, so long as they suit the disease.

Coming nearer now, as early as in 1918, authors of the report on Indian Constitutional Reforms, Mr. Montagu and Lord Chelmsford wrote, in paragraph 227 :—

" At this point we are brought face to face with the most difficult question which arises in connection with elected Assemblies—whether communal electorates are to be maintained. We may be told that this is a closed question, because the Muhammadans will never agree to any revision of the arrangement promised them by Lord Minto in 1906, and secured to them by the reforms of 1909. But we have felt bound to re-examine the question fully in the light of our new policy and also because we have been pressed to extend the system of communal electorates in a variety of directions."

This is no new problem. It has been discussed periodically from the time when the first steps were taken to liberalise the Councils. There has hitherto been a weighty consensus of opinion that in a country like India no principle of representation other than by interests is practically possible. Lord Dufferin held this view in 1888, and in 1892 Lord Lansdowne's Government wrote that :—

" The representation of such a community upon such a scale as the Act permits can only be secured by providing that each important class shall have the opportunity of making its views known in Council by the mouth of some member specially acquainted with them."

We note that in 1892 the small size of the Councils was reckoned as a factor in the decision and that the contrary view was not without its exponents, but we feel no doubt that Lord Minto's Government followed the predominant opinion when, in 1908, they passed for an important extension of the communal principle. Thus we have had to reckon not only with the settled existence of the system, but with a large volume of weighty opinion that no other method is feasible. Because the principle is opposed to the teaching of history and perpetuates class divisions and also stereotyped existing relations, the learned authors were opposed to it, but they said :—

" At the same time, we must face the hard facts. The Muhammadans were given special representations with separate electorates in 1909. The Hindus' acquiescence is embodied in the present agreement between the political leaders of the two communities. The Muhammadans regard these as settled facts and any attempt to go back on them would rouse a great storm of bitter protest and put a severe strain on the loyalty of a community which has behaved with conspicuous loyalty during a period of very great difficulty, and which we know to be feeling no small anxiety for its own welfare under a system of popular government. The Muhammadans regard separate representation and communal electorates as their only adequate safeguard. But apart from a pledge which we must honour until we are released from it, we are bound to see that the community secures proper representation in the new Councils. How can we say to them that we regard the decision of 1909 as mistaken, that its retention is incompatible with progress towards responsible Government, that its reversal will eventually be to their benefit and that for these reasons we have decided to go back on it ? Much as we regret the necessity, we are convinced that so far as the Muhammadans, at all events, are concerned, the present system must be maintained until conditions alter, even at the price of slow progress, towards the realisation of a common citizenship. But we can see no reasons to set up communal representation for Muhammadans in any province where they form a majority of the votes."

Commenting on the above report His Excellency the Governor in Council of Madras wrote :—

" His Excellency in Council is strongly impressed by the necessity of devising some means of providing for the representation of communities which have in the past been unable to secure any adequate share in the elective portion of the Legislative Council. It is a patent defect in the working of the present system that the representation has been so largely monopolised by a single class . . . and the Government trust that the (Franchise) Committee will be able to devise some means for ensuring the due representation of the great mass of the community."

The views of the Government of Bengal are embodied in the following. Thus wrote His Excellency the Governor in Council.

" The subject of communal and special electorate has attracted much attention. While the theoretical objections to their continuance are admitted, the general view of all sections, officials and non-officials, Europeans and Indians, is markedly in favour of their retention, on the ground that in no other way could certain important interests secure a place in the new councils. The Muhammadans strongly urge that they should be given communal representation whether they are in a minority or not, and it is evident that they would regard any other treatment as a breach of faith. The Muhammadan opinions are remarkable for the insistence with which they urge the necessity for special provision in this respect, not only in the councils but also on standing and grand committees and similar bodies, as also in the Public Services."

In another paragraph His Excellency the Governor in Council said :—

" Theoretically it would no doubt be advantageous to have general electorates only, and the objections urged in the Report to Communal representation are just, but it is necessary to deal with the country as it is, not as it ought to be. Concessions have been made to Muhammadans from which it is impossible to withdraw without their consent, and they have made it clear that they do not consent, even to the proposal in para. 231 of the Report, that communal electorates should be retained only in those provinces where the Muhammadans form a minority of the votes. In Bengal, owing to the predominance of Hindu landlords and moneylenders in districts where the bulk of the population are Muhammadans, the latter have every reason for apprehending that their interest will not be duly safeguarded even where they are in a numerical majority."

The Lieutenant Governor of the Punjab writing on the subject said :—

" Apart from the theoretical objections to it, the system of communal representation would afford the simplest solution of conflicting claims in the Punjab. It would meet the views of Muhammadans and Sikhs and though deprecated by the Hindus generally their political leaders could not well go back on the Congress League pact of 1917."

His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor in Council of Behar and Orissa wrote :

" Muhammadans' opinion in the province, where it is not merely a re-assertion of the Congress League Scheme, is content to dwell upon the necessity for Muhammadan representation greatly in excess of the proportion which the Muhammadan element in the population bears to the whole."

Honourable the Chief Commissioner of Assam wrote in detail on the subject. Said his Honour :—

" To my mind it is immaterial whether the community concerned is or is not in a numerical majority in the area under consideration. The real questions are these :—

First.—Is the community one in regard to which it is desirable for political reasons that they should now be represented on the Council by spokesmen of their own race and religion ?

Second.—Has the community any real chance of being now so represented in the absence of a communal electorate ? "

If the answer to the first question is " Yes " and the answer to the second question is " No," then I would brush aside all theoretical considerations, look the situation straight in the face and grant a communal electorate. I have frequently disagreed with my late colleague, Mr. P. C. Lyon, and on no question have disagreed more completely than on the question of constitutional reform, but I desire to express my fullest concurrence with his letter to the Times, dated the 8th August, 1918. After discussing the question of communal representation he concludes as follows :—

" The supporters of the new scheme who have had experience in the working of the Legislative Councils in India ask for communal representation, because they agree with its opponents that it is most important that Indians should learn to work together without consideration of class. It is by using it now to bring all parties together to share alike in public service and responsibility that we shall gradually persuade India that she can do without it."

Continuing His Honour wrote :—

" In view of the recommendations in the Report it is almost unnecessary that I should put forward any arguments on behalf of communal representation for the Muhammadans of the province. Here as elsewhere they are a peculiar people with peculiar interests, and it will be many centuries before they will amalgamate politically with their Hindu or Animist neighbours. They are in a slight majority in the Surma Valley, but in a hopeless minority in the Assam Valley. Taking the two valleys together they amount to one-third of the population, and I therefore propose to give them 10 members out of 30."

Lieutenant-Colonel H. C. Beadon, I.A., Officiating Chief Commissioner of Delhi, said :—

" In these paragraphs it is postulated that electorates must not be communal and that there must be direct connection between members of a Legislative Council and the original votes. Such theories are based on the English conception of democratic rule and representative Government, the idea of mixed electorates is wholly opposed to Oriental ideas and their introduction will cause intense dissatisfaction in Northern India ; racial and inter-creed feeling will be accentuated to such an extent that elections will be impossible . . . I do not deem it advisable to write at length on these subjects, because there is really very little chance of mixed electorates or a system of direct elections being established within the next generation : I merely emphasise that unless good material can be found for the foundations the superstructure must not be built."

Hon'ble the Chief Commissioner of C. P. was against separate election for the Muhammadans, and wrote thus :—

" The Muhammadans are but a fraction of the population and are widely scattered ; it is next to impossible to suggest separate constituencies to meet their case, and in the Central Provinces it would in my opinion be correct to lay down from the outset that the special exception which the Report has made as to the representation of this community cannot be carried into practical effect."

The above written opinion of the Hon'ble the Chief Commissioner of C. P. shows the mentality of the Hinduised Government of our Provinces. Hindus since the Minto-Morley reforms have been the de facto rulers of the province, and against the wishes of the Hindus and the pro-Hindu Chief Commission, Moslems got separate electorate in the Provincial Legislative Councils, but the Chief Commissioner and later on successive Hindu Ministers could dispense with this essential safeguards for the Moslem privileges and rights as far as the Local bodies are concerned. Now let us see the result of the working of the joint electorate in these bodies. Figures given in the Appendix will show the real state of affairs. Not only that the pledges, given by the responsible and highly placed British statesmen, officials and successive government, have been treated as scraps of paper, but deliberate attempts have been successfully made by the Hindu majority in the Legislative Council, supported by the Ministers, to do away with the Moslem representation. Three successive elections of the Local bodies have been held since the new Acts came into force, and there are more than a dozen Municipal Committees and more than half of the District Councils in which not a single Mussulman has been elected as member. The "Direct Election" on joint system of election has been disastrous for the Moslem community. Following are the Municipal Committees which had the fortune of not getting any Mussulman in the election.

In the year 1925–26 in ten committees only one Mussulman came in through the general election in each committee, and in the year 1928 there are thirteen committees in each of which one Moslem member has come in. Detailed examination of the figures, and absence of the Moslems from the elective bodies can well be seen by the enclosed subsidiary tables. It is sufficient to say that no Moslem, however in the forefront of political life he may be, and whatever his educational qualifications may be, could have any chance of successfully competing with a mediocre Hindu. The tables will show that being in the majority they (Hindus) could run the elections in the manner of their liking.

The above shows the pitiable condition of Mussulmans in the Local bodies under the Joint Electorate. Now our opponents say that as the separate election is not good and Mussulmans want some safeguards for them, we are ready to reserve some seats for them. This subject has been so ably discussed by Dr. Shafaat Ahmad Khan in the U. P. Moslem Memorandum to the Simon Commission that I would like to reproduce it in full :—

*These towns, either as headquarters of the district or as important trading centres, in spite of so much Moslem population, are without any Moslem member through any election whatsoever.

JOIN ELECTORATE WITH RESERVATION OF MOSLEM SEATS.

"In order to deal effectively with this subject, it will be necessary to examine in a little greater detail the condition of the Hindu and Moslem society in these provinces of the present day. The United Provinces of India have been the real home of the Moslem rulers of India. Delhi and Agra have been their capital. Oudh, firstly a province of the Moslem emperors of India, was later ruled by Moslem Kings. The Moslems were thus the rulers and the Hindu the ruled. The British acquired these provinces from the Moslems, who naturally at that time had the large interest in the country. Their interest in landed property was considerable. They occupied then, and continued so to occupy for long afterwards, a position of vantage in all public offices, judicial, executive and ministerial. The employment of their own language was also a great asset to them.

The Moslems kept sullenly aloof from all those institutions—educational and political—that the British rule brought in its wake. This attitude of the Moslem brought suspicion in the mind of the British, which was fed by the other communities anxious to secure benefits for themselves. He thus easily became the target of all those invectives and calumnies that were levelled against him. The cumulative result of all these disintegrating forces has been that the Moslem, despite his frantic efforts to recover the ground lost during the last half a century, finds himself backward educationally and economically. His property has been steadily slipping from his hands, and as he is not allowed to engage in banking pursuits, is largely under the influence of the Hindu moneylender. Other communities, e.g. the Hindus proper, on the other hand, took the fullest opportunity of every avenue of progress and advancement that was open to them. Added to this, their endeavour throughout has unfortunately been to dislodge the Moslems from all positions of influence and power. The attitude of laissez faire that the Government adopted towards the Moslems has further contributed to their present position. The result is that while on the one hand the Hindus at present occupy in these provinces position of vantage—they are educationally far superior to the Moslems, they are economically on the strongest possible position, they are organised, they are capable of creating and keeping up agitations, they are imbued with a strong sentiment of creating a nationality of their own which means Hinduism, to the exclusion of all other faiths and peoples—while the Moslems, for reasons which have been detailed above, are less educated, are economically weak, are looked upon as foreigners by the Hindu, are disorganised principally because they are scattered over a large area, are not fond of agitations, and are by habit anxious to give as little trouble to the Government as possible.

Such being the present state of Hindu-Moslem society, could it for a minute be conceived that joint electorates will not mean another inroad on the Moslem position, and will the Moslem be far wrong, in further doubting the bona fides of the British Government towards the Mussulmans of the country if joint electorates were substituted for separate electorates? There is thus no alternative for the Moslems in the present state of the country except to insist on separate electorates and separate representation of the Moslems, much, indeed, as is their desire that it should be done away with soon. Joint electorate with reservation of seats for the Moslems will not avail, for the following among other reasons :—

(1) If separate electorate is bad, joint electorate is bad enough, and both are the negation of democratic theory.

(2) Owing to various reasons, a considerable number of Moslem voters are influenced by Hindu moneylenders, and we fear that if joint electorates with even reservation of seats for the Moslems are established, Moslem voters will not be in a position to exercise their power of voting freely, and Moslem interests will have no chance of representation. A Moslem elected from such a constituency will always be in the hands of the Hindus, and will never be able to stand for purely Moslem rights. He will be nothing if not a mandatory of the Hindus.

(3) Election of Moslems in such joint electorates will further embitter relations between the Hindus and the Moslems, and will be a fruitful cause for constant friction. We will illustrate this by saying that in such an electorate if two Moslems stand, one a nominee of Hindus and the other a nominee of the Moslems, the latter will obviously have no chance. If two Moslems holding conflicting views came in, and the Hindus back one who is a supporter of their views, as the Moslems will be naturally opposed to such a candidate, an atmosphere of discord will be created, and the bitterness engendered will be further reflected in the everyday relations of the two communities.

(4) In all joint constituencies the numerical strength of the Moslems being necessarily very weak, no Hindu need approach the Moslem voters, while the Moslem has no chance except by invoking the aid of the Hindu. The result is the Moslem is being put in a position of inferiority to the Hindu even in democratic institutions in the country, and the further logical sequence following this will be that the Hindus will swamp the election by men, both Hindu and Moslem, of his views, while the Moslem cannot in the least influence the elections.

(5) Moslems standing against Hindu odds and wealth in joint electorates will emerge unsuccessful and financially a wreck. Therefore no Moslem, unless he is a protégé of Hindus, dare stand in joint electorates.

The avowed aim of the British Parliament is to grant to Indians responsible Government within the Empire. This is susceptible of successful fruition only if all the links in the chain of Indian nationalism are equally strongly forged. Unless and until the Moslem link is paid special attention to, will self-Government have any chance of success in this country? The Hindus have so far done nothing, and they refuse to do anything as the course of negotiations during the last few months has shown, to win the confidence of the Moslem minority. It is for the Government now to reassure the Moslem mind by guaranteeing to him the safeguard of his special rights, and by securing him separate seats by separate electorate. The member thus returned by separate electorate has manfully stood for the Moslem rights, has fought the Moslem battle, has represented to the Government the Moslem point of view. Could it for all this be ever said that he has ever betrayed the cause of the country in any one single instance? He has joined the Swarajist group, he has joined the Independent group in Legislature, and has in all cases thrown his weight on the popular side. He (i.e. coming from separate electorate) is a necessity both for the Government, for the country and for the community.

We hope it is clear that if joint electorates are alone restored, Moslems will be wiped out of the Legislatures. If seats are reserved for them in joint electorate, Moslems returned from these electorates will be Moslems in name only, they will be the protégés of the Hindus, and will in no way represent the Moslems.

A great deal has been lately made of the communal troubles. These are attributed to separate electorates granted to the Moslems. Any impartial observer of the trend of events will at once see the hollowness of these illogical assertions. This is a pure innovation, and has been devised to sidetrack the issue. If separate representation has done anything, it has appeased the tension. The real cause of these disturbances is the determination of the majority community established in its own way its political dominance in India by wiping out and crushing the minority community which not long ago was its ruler.

This aggressive policy of the majority community has now taken a concrete shape in the origination of the Hindu Mahasabha, a politico-religious body, which now dominates and guides the action of the Hindu community, in spite of resistance and opposition from the Congress and the ineffective and mild persuasions of other Hindu political bodies, with the result that the Hindus as a community regard the Mahasabha as a genuine organ of their communal aspiration in political, social and religious matters. In our province the Mahasabha has already displaced the influence of the Congress and other political bodies in which the Hindu element predominates. The preachings and activities of the Mahasabha have brought about all the evils which are attributed to separate electorate. The followers of this organization interfere with the religious liberties of the Moslems, knowing that the community, though inclined to put up with every kind of iniquities, cannot tolerate in the least any violation of its religious rights. The hostility which the Hindu Mahasabhite entertain towards the Moslems is manifested by their insistence on the playing of music before mosques just at the prayer time, and in such an aggressive way as to interfere with religious worship; in their parading the streets singing hymns excitable both in purport and prosody, in their staging tableaux vilifying the achievements of the greatest and noblest of the Moslems; in their describing the Moslem rule as the most tyrannical and one whose sole mission in India was forceful conversion of the Hindus to Islam and dishonour of their womenfolk. These activities of the Hindu Mahasabha have made communal riots the normal feature of the life of these provinces. The latest exhibition of the antagonism of the majority community towards the Moslem is the "Shuddhi and Sangathan" movements, whose preachers occupy the highest position in the political, economic and social life of the Hindus. No Moslem could possibly have any objection to these movements if they were pursued, one of them for the propagation of religious faiths and beliefs, and the other for the consolidation of Hindus. Indeed, we would welcome these movements if carried on within their legitimate ambit. But Shuddhi and Sangathan are preached merely to excite hatred against the Moslems. Shuddhi and Sangathan were started in 1923, after the possibilities of the Reforms had been realised by the majority community. The former aims at securing greater numerical superiority for the sake of canvassing political ends, while Sangathan is nothing but a combination of forces for assuming physical triumph against the Moslems. The aim and object of all these activities is to weaken the Moslem as much as possible in order to involve him in financial ruin and creating a feeling of dread in him. We have described this in some detail in order to expose the mind which is anxious to sidetrack the issue to cover its own machinations. The raison d'être of the Hindu mind is that he must create eventually a kingdom for the Hindu alone in India, and that all other communities must be so much reduced in numbers and strength that they must finally merge in them. The irony of the whole situation is that the Government of the land seems to have been so much overpowered by Hindu numbers and by their agitation, however spurious and artificial it may be, that it follows the line of the least resistance, with the result that the minority communities are beginning to lose faith both in its strength and policy. This augurs ill for the future peace and prosperity of the country. Another reason why this charge against the separate representation is made is that the Moslem elected by means of the separate electorate feels quite independent of the Hindu, and is a free agent to represent boldly, to the power that may be, his grievances. This the Hindu does not like; he wants all his acts of unfairness and injustice to remain screened, indeed even under the Union Jack he wants to establish a despotic oligarchy for himself."

The above, though written for U. P., is, word by word, applicable to C. P. and Berar. Being numerically more weak than Moslems in U. P., we, the Mussulmans of C. P. and Berar, will be nowhere under the joint election with reservation of seats.

Now let us see the working of these Municipal Committees and District Councils. The separate election alone will safeguard our right as far as the entry of Moslem members is concerned, and this is not the only chief means for the safeguarding of Moslem interest. There must be effective safeguards for the education of our children, the representation of our community in the administration and the defence of our religious rights. Few members in a committee of four or five times more non-Moslem members can safeguard our interests. They may protest, and dissent, and go to the extent of getting their protest recorded, but it is insufficient. So not only that we should be adequately represented, but also some means be found to guarantee our proportion of grant for Moslem education, fair number of posts in each department of local bodies and good number of contracts for Moslem contractors.

Separate electorate alone is useless. We want it supplemented by effective safeguards for the defence of our rights. This may be against democracy or other theory of State, but it is based on painful experience of the working of these so-called democratic bodies. Let us examine how the majority community has distributed the power and influence. In practically every Municipal Committee and District Council, Hindus have elected chairmen of their own community. In whole of C. P. and Berar in the year 1925–26, out of fifty committees only one had a Mussulman chairman, and in the year 1928 there is again only three Mussulman Chairmen of the Municipal Committees. As regards District Councils, and Local Boards, the position is still worse. The Hindus can find Moslem chairmen in every town for the boycott of Simon Commission and for any and every political movement, when the Congress Committees are formed, and they find no Moslems in their rank, and when, as a community, Mussulmans refuse to join them, they catch hold of one or two Mussulman hirelings and make them Presidents and Vice-Presidents; but when they go to these Local Bodies and find that there goes power and prestige with the office-bearers, they deliberately exclude Mussulmans. In the year 1925–26, out of 100 Vice-Chairmen elected, not even twelve were Mussulmans. And in the year 1928, Moslems have fared still worse. Out of 45 Committees, for which figures are available, forty are entitled to elect two Vice-Chairmen each, and there are five committees that can elect only one each, thus making the Vice-Chairmen eighty-five in number, out of which fifteen are Mussulmans. There are thirty Committees, out of forty-five, which have non-Mussulmans as Vice-Chairman and two seats of Vice-Chairmen in these Committees have been monopolised by the Hindus. Position in the District Councils and Local Boards is still worse. There you will find Hindus as Chairmen and Vice-Chairmen in all the places, and it is the general accepted rule, and if there is any Mussulman it is exception to this general rule.

In the Municipal Act, it is provided that to bring in men of eminence, high qualification and having experience, the elected and nominated members are given power to select few members. This saves the candidate from the election fight and canvassing to a large body of voters. Here again the Mussulmans have been the greatest sufferers. In the year 1925–26, out of fifty Committees, in thirty-seven not a single Mussulman was selected. In the year 1928 Mussulmans have fared worse. Figures for forty-six Municipal Committees which have up till now held the selection are available. Out of these, there are thirty-one Committees which have the fortune of not having even one Mussulman as selected member, and in thirteen Committees one Mussulman in each Committee came in. Pro-Hindu attitude and tendency of the Local Government, which is responsible for all the above misfortune of the Mussulmans for not providing separate electorate for the Moslems, will be shown when we have the figures of fifty-five Committees in which Government nominated members are as many as two to four. Out of these thirty-six Committees could get no Mussulman. In fourteen Committees Government nominated one member in each. There is not a single Committee which got two nominated members from Moslem community.

Position of Mussalmans in Notified Area, Local Boards and District Councils, cotton grain and mining committees can well be seen by the subsidiary tables and summary attached with each. The tale is so pitiable that a glance at the figures will show the condition in which we Moslems have been put in.

SERVICES UNDER BODIES.

As these bodies contain an overwhelming number of Hindus, they are bent upon Hinduising every department and all Services. All the posts from top to bottom, with the exception of one or two unimportant posts have been captured by the Hindus. To put them in figures is useless. Suffice it to say that you will not find half a dozen Secretaries or Health Officers. Some old hands have been dismissed or their services dispensed with on the plea of retrenchment. In fact the avenue of services under the Local bodies whether Municipal or District Council are completely closed for Mussalmans and they have no chance at the hand of Hindu majority.

EDUCATION.

There is already a separate chapter on education hence I do not wish to repeat the same here. Suffice it to say that local bodies are deliberately trampling over our rights. Moslem children are compelled to learn Hindi in Nagri script and they have "violated all rules of neighbourliness, good taste and camaraderie by resorting to actions which have made an honourable existence for our community impossible." Hindu teachers are exclusively in local body schools. They try to kill our culture and civilisation.

CONTRACTS.

The natural tendency of the Hinduised committees and District Councils is to give all their contracts to Hindus and nobody else. Even Moslem contractors tendering low rates are not given contracts. Contracts, small or big, under these bodies are exclusively given to Hindu contractors. To collect figures is waste of time. They call it the spoils of office. As they have established complete Hindu Raj, the benefit in the hands of these bodies must go to their co-religionists. With Hindu P.W.D. committees, Hindu Chairmen, Hindu Secretaries, Hindu Engineers, and Overseers, it is no wonder that Hindus alone get all the contracts.

SLAUGHTER HOUSES.

All efforts are made by Hindu majority to close the Slaughter Houses within their area on one pretext or other. Unsuccessful attempts made at different places are well known. Various European I.C.S. Commissioners and Deputy Commissioners have been witness to the fact that their intervention alone has given us this essential article of food. The meat by hawking is being objected to. The Hindus want to stop the slaughter of all animals in general and cows in particular. Attempts are made to hamper the trade of butchers.

SUB-COMMITTEES.

The functions and actual working of the Municipal Committees, District Councils and Local Boards are carried into practical effect through various sub-committees, such as City Site, Education, P.W.D., Finance, Working or Managing, Sanitary, Plague, special sub-committees. Positions of Mussulmans can better be imagined than described, in short, they are not seen in any such committees.

GENERAL.

Majority is making detrimental effect on the house property of the Moslems. Applications of Mussulmans for house construction are rejected on petty technical grounds. Drainage is only confined mostly in Hindu quarters. Provision of light has the same monopolistic tendency. Hindu wards are lighted and Moslem wards are kept in darkness. The same treatment is as regards water. Water mains and standard pipes for public use are only put in wards and roads mainly inhabited by the Hindus. Though several Mandirs have been allowed to be built, and temples encroaching on Nazul and municipal lands are allowed to be built, whereas mosques for Mussulmans on the land belonging to Mussulmans are not allowed. Moslem institutions of charity, library, etc., receive very nominal (?grants), whereas Hindu institutions are handsomely given big grants for all sorts of purposes. As regards sanitation the same stepmotherly treatment is given to Moslem wards. The dominating majority of Hindus contemptuously disregard the Moslem feelings and abuse their powers in contravention of all laws and rules.

In short, we may say that all the local bodies of this province are Hinduised. Hindus have monopolised all the posts and services. Hindu language is thrust on the Moslem children; our religion, culture, civilisation, and historical importance are despised, discouraged and held up to ridicule. The Hindus, knowing that they are fully protected by the British troops, misuse the powers given to them under the Municipal and Local Bodies Acts for consolidation of their influence and power. Thus they trample over the rights of all minorities. They have not only killed Urdu, they force us to learn a new language. They have kicked away our contractors. The powers vested in these Acts touch us at all points in life. As they have been granted large and substantial powers, the same is being used against the Mussulmans.

In short, the majority community has failed to protect the rights of the minorities. There can be no stable constitution of India unless protection for the safeguard of the rights of the Mussulman minorities is guaranteed. There is no other way of returning Moslem representation but through separate election. The joint electorate has failed miserably to bring in our representation. Mussulmans in those towns where they are twenty-five to thirty per cent. of the population are represented by not more than ten per cent. of their members. The position of Moslem minorities is peculiar, and you, sir, should take note of it.

In conclusion, I would like to summarise the difficulties and hardships in which Moslems have been put by the majority community :—

(1) The Moslems cannot be represented in any of the Municipal Committees, District Councils and Local Boards to the extent of their numerical strength demands, and in a large number of places where they are even twenty per cent. to thirty per cent. not a single Mussulman member has been elected, and this is the blessing of the joint electorate which has been thrust on us by the Hindu majority of the Legislative Council with Hindu minister for local self-government. More than seventy per cent. of Local and District Boards go without Moslem representation. Not one in ten to thirty Hindu members is a Moslem.

(2) In election of office-bearers the same tale of Hindu monopoly is repeated. There are not more than six chairmen in the whole of C.P. and Berar in all the local bodies, which are more than two hundred.

(3) In the sub-committees the same Hindu majority is seen.

(4) In almost all local bodies, Moslem contractors are eliminated. For show, there may be one or two on the list, but they are not given any work.

(5) All fair and unfair, open and secret attempts are made to stop cow-slaughter; the Burma meat trade of Saugor, Damoh, Rahatgarh and other places is destroyed and the legitimate trade of Mussulmans in this branch is stopped. Meat selling by hawking is not allowed in different places.

(6) Not only Moslem servants under the local bodies are being dismissed one by one, but also every effort is being made to create difficulty in their fresh recruitment. There are Municipalities and District Councils which have not a single Mussulman in their service.

You will not find a Moslem sanitary inspector, health officer, secretary, octroi superintendent, water works inspector or supervisor of school, as all these posts are held by Hindus only.

(7) Moslem quarters are not getting full share of expenses for making roads, lights, and water-pipes. In short, Moslem quarters are ignored and their sanitation neglected.

(8) Hindu majority in all the bodies does not like to pay anything for the primary education of Moslem boys through Urdu. All attempts are made to close Urdu schools and whereas Hindu religious institutions get large amounts as contributions, Moslem institutions are ignored altogether.

(9) Moslems are not permitted to construct mosques, whereas Hindus are given permission at many places to erect temples, and they encroach upon municipal or Nazul land.

(10) Applications in our national language (Urdu) are not accepted and Moslems are forced to put in applications in Nagri script.

(11) Proceedings of local bodies are being kept in most of the places in Hindi (Nagri script) and the copies of the proceedings are sent to Moslems in Sanskritised Hindi. No provision is made to keep the same in Urdu.

After seeing the above pitiable condition of Mussulmans under Hindu majority, you will agree with us that unless fundamental safeguards for the Moslem minorities are guaranteed, there is no hope of justice to be done to our community. These are the rights of Mussulmans which must be guaranteed by the Parliamentary Statute, which should not be allowed to be altered by any Legisfature in India, Central or Provincial. Parliament of Great Britain must guarantee these before any constitutional change is made, otherwise we will move heaven and earth to scrap it, if any constitution imposed on us without these essential safeguards.

(1) Adequate representation of Mussulmans in each Municipal Committee, District Council, Local Board, Mining Committee, Grain Market Committee and Notified Area Committees be made through separate electorate by Moslem voters alone. Number of seats to be awarded by seeing the numerical strength, past historical and present political importance of the community are to be taken into consideration.

(2) Representation of the Mussulmans in the services of the Local Bodies in all their branches in proportion of the seats held by them be fixed. The recruitment, supervision, control and power of dismissal to be vested in a Provincial Service Commission. The Local Bodies are not to be allowed to dispense with or dismiss their servants and all this power to be vested in this commission.

(3) Fixed percentage of grant in aid to Moslem institutions be paid according to the seats they hold in that body.

(4) Safeguard for Urdu, its script, primary education, through Urdu is required for Moslem boys. Moslem Public and Moslem members to be supplied with all papers, publication record, notices, summons, and proceedings in their own language (Urdu).

(5) Adequate number of contracts in quality and quantity to be given to Moslem Contractors.

(6) The Local Government and the Governor should be given power to see that rights of Moslem minorities are not trampled upon.

(7) No resolution or part thereof affecting any community, which question is to be determined by the community in the elected body concerned, shall be passed or given effect to if three-fourths of the members of that community oppose the resolution or motion or part thereof.

(8) Sub-Committees of each elected body should be elected by single transferable vote to ensure representation of minorities.

(9) Nomination of members should not be entrusted to any Minister, but a committee of 3, one European, one Hindu and one Moslem member of the counsel, should be appointed to select the members for nomination from the list submitted by the Deputy Commissioner and the Commissioner.

(10) The Chairman of all local bodies should be alternatively Hindu and Mussulman, and out of two vice-chairmen one must always be Moslem.

STRANGLING OF OUR LANGUAGE.

The greatest drawback of the Government of India Act is the lack of fundamental safeguard for the protection of minorities in India. Nothing has been done to protect our national language—Urdu. It is in Urdu that our literature is enshrined, in it are preserved our historical, political and religious traditions. To it we owe the preservation of our political existence and cultural life. Our boy is not an isolated unit, but is a link in the mighty chain that stretches from one part of India to another. If he learns Hindi, he is completely cut off from that stream of Moslem culture and tradition, which is, and must always remain, the distinctive contribution of Islam to India. Consequently if a Moslem parent hears that Hindi is being forced down the throats of his little ones, he will rather forego all the advantages which education offers, than expose his son to a process which may de-Islamise him. This feeling is so keen, intense and vivid, and it is so well known to every one who has the least acquaintance with the educational movement and educational progress of this country, that we do not think it necessary to emphasise it here.

But persistent, organised and systematic attempt is being made to completely wipe out and kill our national language. We have no complaint if no other people use it, but to force our community to leave it is an endeavour which is rightly to be condemned.

The C. P. Gazette publishes the translation of all the bills and acts in Marathi and Hindi, but no translation of the same is being given in Urdu. Even the language, in Hindi, has the tendency of being Sanskritised rather than being made Hindustani. The summonses, Court notices and other orders are forced on Urdu-knowing Mussulmans in an unknown language and Urdu summonses are nowhere to be found.

District Councils, Local Boards and Municipalities are making their office language Hindi instead of English and that also in Nagri script.

Out of 22 District Councils and about 100 Local Boards and 65 Muncipal Committees, there are only few committees which can be numbered on fingers who pay little grant to Urdu Schools. In fact Urdu Schools are being systematically closed. Since 1922–23, Hindi, Marathi and Urdu according to local circumstances were introduced as the medium of instruction in the High Schools, and in Government institutions they were made compulsory. Only those schools which contained more than one section of a class were permitted to retain English as medium of instruction in one section, provided that there was a substantial demand for it on the part of minority communities. In the words of the Director of Public Instruction: "Except in the Muhammadan High School, Amraoti, where Urdu has been prescribed as the medium of instruction, one or other of the main vernaculars of the Province, Marathi or Hindi has been prescribed in all Government High Schools." This means in all the Government High Schools except, of course, the Muhammadan High School, Amraoti, the medium of instruction is Hindi or Marathi. The Director of Public Instruction admits that this had led to the sacrifice of the language of minorities. In the University, the same tale is to be told. No arrangement in any of the colleges of the Central Provinces has been made to give instruction in Urdu, though arrangement for studying Marathi and Hindi has been made in more than one College.

Above is the attempt made through Government and non-Government agencies. The Congressmen's attitude towards our language is more dishonest and misleading. The 14 districts of C.P. are called by the Congress Hindustani C. P., and it is told by Mahatma Gandhi and other Congress leaders that Hindustani is the language which can be written in either script Nagri or Persian. It is Hindi and Urdu both, but, in actual practice, what is being done is that a Hindi of highly Sanskrit type with Nagri script is used. To the outer world and Mussulmans Hindustani in name is shown, and whereas they (Hindus) also use a language which is high class Hindi with Nagri script. Their proceeding books and records will vouchsafe the above statement.

In short the education of our boys through the medium of our language is being purposely neglected and a language that is devoid of our culture, sentiment and nationality is thrust down their tender throats.

The local bodies are not paying even a small fraction of their grants for Urdu schools. Government High Schools have excluded the Urdu language, and by making Hindi and Marathi as the medium of instruction are forcing our boys to leave Urdu altogether. The Government orders and summonses are being forced on us in another language. Government publication is being confined to Marathi or Hindi language. University has not arranged tuition in this language, and on top of this non-official agencies are bent upon killing this language and thrusting on us a script of Nagri.

We therefore state it clearly that we will not accept any constitution which does not guarantee us by a Parliamentary Statute an adequate safeguard for the Urdu language in the courts, Government Departments, Educational institutions, local and other elective bodies created and controlled by the Legislature. The above safeguard of our national language should be through the Parliamentary Statute and no local body or legislature in India should be allowed to touch it.

MOSLEMS AND UNIVERSITY EDUCATION.

The Calcutta University Commission, more often called the Sadler Commission, in its chapters 49, 33, 32 and 31, laid down certain principles. Without going into the details, which you, sir, will see yourself, suffice it to mention that the Sadler Commission laid down that in every important body of the Universities Muhammadans should be given adequate representation. The Court of the University is the most important body and next to it is the Executive Council which carries out the policy of the Court. The Sadler Commission is emphatic and clear in its recommendation that good number of Mussulmans should be its members. Then the other important bodies in their turn are Selection Committee, different faculties and Academic Council. They ought to have adequate representation of the Moslems. The Sadler Commission further wanted a Moslem Advisory Board invested with great and very important powers. If I give the extracts from the able report of the Commission it will be sheer repetition, but I request you to read the chapter referred to above. It will show you clearly and plainly the type of University the Commission desired. Now let us see how far these recommendations have been carried out in our Nagpur University, and whether it has justified the hopes and expectations of the Commission. We do not object to the principle of Autonomy which the Act has conferred on the Nagpur University, but we strongly object to the deliberate, systematic manner in which the recommendations of the Sadler Commission—recommendations that were integral part of the Scheme formulated by the Commission—have been ignored and trodden down. No provision has been made for the establishment of a Moslem Advisory Board, and nothing has been provided in the Act to safeguard the interest of the Moslems. Natural result of this deliberate negligence of the claims of the Mussulmans is that Moslem interests have been jeopardised. In the election to various bodies of this University as well as in appointments Moslems have practically no chance of election or appointment. We declare that in these appointments as well as in the election to various bodies of the University, Moslem interest and Moslem claims have not been deliberately given due attention—they have simply been ignored. The Nagpur University in the opinion of our community is more or less a Hindu University, a " Bhonslai Varsity " as called by the students of the Hindi-speaking districts. We are nowhere to be seen in the Registrar's office, in the departments of teaching of this University and in its Colleges. We have absolutely no chance of winning seats in any one of these bodies whatsoever. It is our painful and bitter experience that such elections are being run on communal lines. As the Hindu voters are overwhelmingly in majority and the system of election is that much praised " joint one," Moslems are crushed at the altar of the so-called democratic system. In fact, sole monopoly has been established by the Hindus in all the bodies of the University and its teaching department. It is so strong and effective that no Moslem has any chance of advancement in the Nagpur University. That state of affairs is such that you will readily condemn it in no ambiguous language and take steps to reform it.

The Nagpur University was incorporated under C.P. Act No. V of 1923, known as Nagpur University Act of 1923, and the same having received the assent of the Governor-General of India on 6th June, 1923, came into force. Following are the officers of the University.

(1) The Chancellor.
(2) The Vice Chancellor.
(3) The Treasurer.
(4) The Registrar.
(5) The Deans of the Faculties.
(6) Such other officers as may be declared by the statutes to be officers.

For the last five years the Hindus have been enjoying the sole monopoly of the 'Varsity in appointing the Chief Officers, the rest being the European servants of the Crown.

Under section 15 of the Act following are the authorities of the University :—

(1) The Court.
(2) The Executive Council.
(3) The Academic Council.
(4) The Committee of Reference and
(5) The Faculties.

I will take the above one by one and will show how they have been monopolised by the Hindus.

Leaving the Chancellor and the Visitor, who is the Governor of C.P. and Governor-General of India, who are Europeans, the Vice-Chancellor, the Treasurer the Registrar and the Assistant Registrar are all Hindus. In the Court as constituted under Sec. 16 (i) of the Act, the Governor of C.P. is the Chancellor, who is a European, Vice-Chancellor is a Hindu non-Official. Of the members of the Executive Council and Ministers of the Governor of the C.P. one is European I.C.S. and the rest three are Hindus. Judicial Commissioner and Bishop of Nagpur, who are members because of their posts, are Europeans. Representative of the Executive Council is a Hindu and five Deans of Faculties are all Europeans. Four members elected on Court are all Hindus. Four members elected by the Academic Council are all Hindus. The only exception is the one member nominated by the Local Government who is a Mussulman. Member elected by the registered graduates to the Legislative Council is a Hindu. Members of the Academic Council, who are Principals of the Colleges, are all Europeans with the exception of one who is a Hindu. Two members elected by the Faculty of Law are Hindus, out of three elected by Faculty of Art, one is a Parsee and two Hindus. All the three elected by Faculty of Science are Hindus. Three elected by the Faculty of Education, two of the Faculty of Agriculture are all Hindus. Out of five nominated by the Chancellor (the Governor) only one is a Mussulman, one European and three are Hindus again. Three elected by the Court are all Hindus. Out of two co-opted members one is a Mussulman and the other a Hindu. As ex-officio members, the Director of Public Instruction, Central Provinces, Inspector General of Civil Hospitals, Principal of Agriculture, Chief Conservator of Forests, Chief Engineer to the Government of C.P. Commissioner of Berar, Inspectors and Inspectress of Schools are all Europeans, and two representatives of the Legislative Council, two Headmasters of High Schools nominated by the Government and Director of Industries are all Hindus. In Class III under Section 16 (i) (xii) of the Act, Registered Graduates elected, on 8th January, 1927, 24 members, and all were Hindus. Not a single Mussulman graduate came in as a member. Under paragraph 2 (five) of the First Statutes Colleges elected 16 members and all the 16 representatives were Hindus, and in this also not a single Mussulman is seen. The Chancellor nominates 10 members under Sec. 16 (i) (xvi) of the Act, in which 2 are Europeans, 2 Parsees, 1 Mussulman and again 5 Hindus. In short, the Court has not a single Mussulman through any sort of election; three Mussulmans have been nominated by the Local Government and one is the co-opted member. This means that in all elections, whether by the Graduates or donors of different Faculties of Council or Executive Council, no Mussulman can hope to come in the Court.

Now I come to the Executive Council under paragraph 3 (i) of the First Statutes: out of 17 members 10 are Hindus, 5 are European officials, one Parsee and one Mussulman. The important point to note is that through election not a single person other than Hindu came. If the European officials were not then in their respective posts all the seats would have been captured by the Hindus. The solitary figure of a single Mussulman is due to the nomination by the Government.

The Academic Council consists of 38 members, and no Mussulman could come in through election by the Faculty of Law or Faculty of Art, or Faculty Science, or Faculty of Education, or Faculty of Agriculture or through election by the Court. Out of 4 nominated members there is only one Mussulman, who has been nominated by the Chancellor, and another came in by co-option. This means that the whole Academic Council of 38 members has, by the grace of Government, one Moslem and one other by co-option as member. The Committee of Reference consists of 15 members and there is only one Moslem in it. The Faculty of Arts consists of 36 members. There are 4 Mussulmans in this body, out of which 3 are there because of their being Professors of Persian and Arabic in different Colleges. In the Faculty of Science there are 16 members with not a single Mussulman. There is not a single Mussulman in Faculty of Education which has 9 members, in Faculty of Law which has 10 members, and in Faculty of Agriculture which has 12 members. Now the same tale is to be told about the Board of Studies. In English there are 8 members, out of which 2 are Hindus and 6 Europeans. In Philosophy, which consists of 6 members, 2 are Europeans and 4 Hindus. In History, out of 8 members, 3 are Europeans and 5 Hindus. In Economics out of 6, 2 are Europeans and 4 Hindus. In Sanscrit, Pali and Prakrit there are 9 who are all Hindus. In Persian and Arabic out of 8, 7 are Mussulmans, but even there a Hindu is again found. Modern European and Classical Languages are under the Europeans. In Political Science, out of 6, four are Hindus and 2 Europeans. In Modern Indian Languages out of 10 one is Mussulman and 9 Hindus. In Physics, Chemistry, Mathematics, Zoology, Botany, Law, Education and Agriculture there is not a single Mussulman.

The University Library Committee has 9 members, with only one Mussulman. In the Subject Examination Committees, except for Persian, Arabic and Urdu, all the members are Hindus save one or two Europeans.

The Finance Committee, the General Examination Committee, Extension Lectures Committee, Law College Committee, Special Examination Committee are solely and wholly composed of Hindu members with the solitary exception of one or two Europeans, who have won these seats through their high position in the Colleges or Educational institutions.

Representatives of the University on Inter-University Board, India; Board of High School Education C.P., and Berar C.P. Legislative Council and Court of India Institute of Science, Bangalore, all have been thoroughly Hinduised from top to bottom.

The above is the picture of the Nagpur University from within and without. This shows how the so-called "Cultured" and "Enlightened" body is communal-stricken. When the centre of learning consisting of educated people is so much communalised, no wonder the country is surcharged with it. The whole machinery from top to bottom is composed of Hindus. Wherever they had the power of election they had strictly excluded Mussulmans from it. When the whole structure is standing on communal grounds and is utilised for the sole benefit of one community, the natural result will be that all work will be done for that community only. Now I would like to show the result of the activities of this pure Hindu University. Let us take the list of examiners for the year 1927. Casual reading will show that the examinations of all subjects in all classes have been solely monopolised by Hindus alone for the sole benefit of Hindus. Examiners for Intermediate are all Hindus except of Persian and Arabic who are Mussulmans, and one or two Europeans. The same Hindu monopoly is to be found in the Degree examination of B.A., B.Sc., M.A., M.Sc., LL.B. and L.T. and Degree of Agriculture. There is one aspect of the question worth considering. The Examiners get remuneration, which is from Rs50 to Rs200 for setting a question paper and Rs1-8 to 2-8 for marking each answer book, besides the payment for practical examination (in Science), viva voce, etc. The University has thus paid Rs27,340 in one year only. The money-loving and gold-worshipping community is so selfish that it even cannot like the idea of sharing this amount with the other sister community. In fact, leaving few hundred rupees to be paid to other community, the major portion of this sum, which will be not less than Rs27,000 has been swallowed by the Hindu Examiners. The mania for monopoly is so great that even in Persian, Arabic and Urdu a Hindu examiner is thrusted.

As regards the Colleges maintained by the University, the University College of Law has got one Bengalee Principal and 4 lecturers, and all of them are Hindus. Following institutions are admitted into the privileges of the University.

(1) Morris College, Nagpur—In this college English, French, and History Professors are Europeans, and the rest, 15 professors, are all Hindus, except for Persian, for which two Assistant Professors are, of course, Mussulmans.

(2) Hislop College, Nagpur—The same story is of this college also, which is a missionary institution, and has 4 Europeans and 12 Hindu Professors. This college has no Mussulmans on the staff; even Persian Classes are not maintained though there are Marathi Classes with one Marathi Professor.

(3) The Victoria College of Science, Nagpur—There are 2 Europeans and 11 Hindu Professors, Demonstrators and Assistant Professors. This college has the good honour of not having a single Mussulman in its staff.

(4) The Robertson College, Jubbulpore—It has one European, one Indian Christian, one Parsee and 15 Hindu Professors with their Assistants and Demonstrators; the only exception being one Moslem Assistant Professor of Persian.

(5) The King Edward College, Amraoti—It has one European, 2 Indian Christian, and 11 Hindu Professors, Assistant Professors and Demonstrators, with one Mussulman as Persian Assistant Professor.

(6) The Spence Training College, Jubbulpore—It has one European and 6 Hindus on the staff, but not a single Mussulman.

(7) Agriculture College, Nagpur—Out of 22 members on the staff, not a single Mussulman finds a place.

The above finishes the picture of the teaching staff of the Nagpur University.

Now to come to the result. Figures are available for the years 1924–27. It is just what can be anticipated when the atmosphere is surcharged with communal feelings and the chief officers of the University, members of the teaching staff and examiners are all Hindus. Students of other communities cannot fare better. For this reason alone, our promising students are compelled to seek admission into other Universities, which are free from communal contagion. These youths are kept away from the Government service on the unsound ground that they do not hold the degree of this "Nagpur University" which is "Marathi," in nature, spirit and character. Following is the number of successful students of different communities in various degree examinations from the year 1924 up to the year 1927:—

	Hindus.	Christians.	Mussulmans.
M.A.	47	1	3 (in Persian).
B.A.	360	5	26
M.Sc.	18	0	0
B.Sc.	102	0	6
LL.B.	170	2	6
L.T.	64	0	8
Intermediate Arts	271	4	14 (for the year 1927 only).
Intermediate Agriculture	16	0	1

One more difficulty which Mussulman students have to undergo is that their mother tongue is Urdu, but not a single college in C.P. has made arrangements to give them lessons in it, though the same is one of the modern Indian languages. Naturally they are handicapped in this respect. Morris College, Nagpur, teaches Marathi up to M.A., and Hislop College up to B.A., and Robertson College, Jubbulpore, has been allowed to teach Hindi up to M.A. Naturally, the question arises, what arrangement has the University made for those students who wish to take Urdu as one of the modern Indian languages ? It would have put them to no extra cost if teaching of Urdu had been allowed through the Professors of Arabic and Persian. By not making arrangement for the teaching of Urdu in any of the colleges no student other than a teacher can be permitted to appear in this subject, because of their not having attended regular course of study in any of the recognised colleges.

The above statement will clearly show that the position of Mussulmans is scandalously nil and at stake in the University. Unless you, sir, step in, the Government is sure to sleep over this massacre of the Moslem interest. How is it possible for Moslem boys to get education in an hostile atmosphere and to show his real worth ? In spite of all drawbacks the report of the Director of Public Instruction says :

> " Muhammadan students have done well in " collegiate education. The Principal, King " Edward College, Amraoti, bears witness to " the fact that in spite of their small numbers " as compared with students of other communi- " ties in the college, the Muhammadan students " have taken a prominent part in all phases of " college life. They have shown energy and " enthusiasm and have acquitted themselves " extraordinarily well, exerting a healthy " influence both in the class room and in general " life of the college. Some of them have won " Government and King Edward Memorial " Scholarships and have distinguished themselves " in the University examinations. They have " also taken a prominent part in the University " sports and in college games and have done well " in the inter-collegiate debates of the Nagpur " University Union."

In this communal-cursed country, where one God-made man is not touched by another, I say definitely, Hindu teaching staff, who control all the sphere of the Nagpur University, are generally unsympathetic to Moslem students. In fact Moslem students are badly treated and their religion is despised. Innumerable instances are found to insult them and to expose them to indignities. In spite of all this, our boys have shown their worth and are endeavouring to make great headway in college education. It is an honour to their religion and pride to their community to get the endorsement of the Director of Public Instruction as quoted above. If the situation is changed and a certain number of Professors, Readers and Demonstrators are put in from the Moslem community, the impetus to Moslems for higher education will be tremendous.

We are therefore of the opinion that we cannot have our claims at the mercy of the major community which is in power. Our interest at every stage of education has been trampled down. We are convinced that the only safeguard is by the insertion of our demands in the new Constitution of India with the clear mandate that no Legislature or other body in India should be allowed to touch it.

The paucity of Moslem teachers and students in Agricultural college, Engineering school, Medical school and Law college is such that your immediate attention is drawn to it. The number of students there is so small that they can be counted on fingers. The prospect of vocational training of our community is dangerously alarming. Unless seats are reserved for our students, there is no hope of their entry in these colleges.

Our recommendations therefore are :—

(1) We are strongly of opinion that in all bodies of the Nagpur University, such as Court, Executive Council, and various committees, the number of Moslem members should be reserved and in none of these bodies their percentage be less than 25 per cent. In future no University in the province be allowed to be established unless this fundamental right of the Moslems is incorporated in its constitution. This does not mean that we object to the autonomy of the University, but what we emphatically object to is the failure to reserve our proportion in those bodies.

(2) We strongly advocate that 25 per cent. of all appointments in the University and in each department of teaching be reserved for Moslems and unless this be done evidently Moslem students will not join in that number in which they ought to join in the University.

(3) We propose that 25 per cent. of the students who are admitted to the colleges affiliated to the Nagpur University should be Moslems, and specially in the vocational colleges and schools 25 per cent. seats should be reserved for the Moslems and preference to this extent be given to them.

(4) We further propose that the Nagpur University should establish chairs of Islamic History, Islamic Philosophy, Islamic Jurisprudence, Arabic, Persian, and Urdu. Though the course of study prescribed Urdu up to M.A. (one of the modern languages) yet no arrangement of its teaching has been done in any of the colleges. Immediate steps should be taken to make arrangements for it.

(5) We are of opinion that election to different bodies of the University for the reserved number of Moslem seats should always be made through Moslem graduates and other class of electors from the Moslem community, and the election should not be made under the so-called joint ticket, because that will bring, though in name Moslem representatives, yet in fact it will be negation of all Moslem representative. Because their re-election will be at the mercy of the Hindu majority votes, they will never prove true to their community, but will always be the spokesmen of their electors, viz., the Hindus.

(6) We take it a very serious matter that Hindus are holding monopoly as examiners for different examinations of the University. Not only that they swallow Rs27,000 every year under this head alone, but Moslem students are naturally the first who are kicked by them as failures. We therefore claim that not only 25 per cent. of the examiners should be Moslem, but the proportion of the money paid be fixed, because we are afraid that Hindu monopolists will put in any number of Moslem examiners, but they will send few papers for examination, hence strict proportion be made.

(7) Immediately a Moslem Advisory Board be set up and the same should be invested with real powers as suggested in Calcutta University Commission report, and its formation, authority and powers should be clearly defined in the constitution, so that no law making or executive body can touch it or whittle down its powers.

(8) Finally, we are of opinion that representation in the different bodies of the University, in the teaching staff and in the students should form a fundamental part of the constitution of India, and should not be left to the mercy of the Hinduised legislature of the country.

POSITION OF MOSLEMS IN PRIMARY AND SECONDARY EDUCATION.

There has been a growing belief in some quarters for some time past that the Indian Moslems have earnestly and resolutely set themselves to the task of organising communal education. We do not know if there is any solid ground for such belief, but for Indian Moslems there may exist such belief; as far as the Mussulmans of Central Province and Berar are concerned, there is no remote chance of this belief even. No doubt the community is astir with new hopes and fresh desires. The problem of education too, one must acknowledge, has bulked large in recent communal discussions, but there is no attempt to solve the main educational problems of C.P. and Berar Moslems. Moslem education throughout the Province is, according to all reasonable standards, still in a backward state. The rate of educational progress amongst the Hindus is growing proportionately higher every year and the amount of energy that the Mussulmans have recently shown is not at all adequate to enable them to cover an ever-increasing distance that divides them from the progressive Hindu community. It matters little whether the number of Mussulmans receiving instruction in the public schools and colleges of the provinces has appreciably increased unless this increase helps to raise the percentage of the educated Mussulmans on the basis of their numerical strength in the population. The pace has got to be quickened considerably if the general educational level of the country is to be attained. But even more important than the rate of progress is the organisation of communal education in accordance with the communal needs. The rate of progress itself depends to a large extent on such organisation.

C.P. and Berar is one of the provinces where Mussalmans are only just beginning to see that they are hopelessly backward educationally.

The most glaring feature of the statistics relating to education in C.P. and Berar is the very low percentage of the successful Moslem candidates in the various examinations held by the Nagpur University, C.P., High School Education Board and Department examinations.

of British rule, there have been certain peculiar influences which have been operating with disastrous effect amongst the C. P. and Berar Moslems and have kept them so far behind the race. Hindus furnish perhaps the most remarkable instance in history of the adaptability of character to environment. He took to English education as a duck takes to water, with a facility that is amazing, as if he had no race or creed loyalty to which violence could be done, no sense of possession in some historic culture having its roots deep in history. His new acquisition brought him official favours, wealth and influence. With the taste of new power his appetite increased. He profited by his opportunities with masterly shrewdness. As a matter of fact he loomed with fearful dominance over the whole range of public affairs in the Province. He altogether suppressed the Mussulman who stood aloof from modern education. He swamped the new schools, monopolised the public services and created the sort of public opinion which became the only standard of judgment for the rulers in the administration of the province. The Mussulmans, forced to retire tortoise-like within their shell, almost lost the sense of their own individuality. The Hindu spirit pervaded every sphere of public life. It even invaded the schoolroom, and the Moslem boys in the public schools of the province have to learn text books even to-day which are saturated with the spirit of the Hindu mythology and ancient lore of Mahabharat. In brief, the Moslem problem of C.P. and Berar has all along been how to rescue the community from the thraldom of Hindu influence and set it on its legs again. Emancipation in its widest sense has been the one supreme need of the C.P. and Berar Moslems.

When the late Hon. Mr. Gokhale brought forward his Bill for compulsory primary education, the All-India Moslem League re-affirmed its resolution in support of the main provisions of the Bill " with some reservations to safeguard Moslem interests." The need for " reservations " must have been felt to have grown marked and insistent in view of the frank enunciation of the policy of Hindus with regard to language and kindred questions. It is useless at this stage to criticise or deplore the growth of narrow party passions and political shibboleths with which the natural development of a common Indian language has been sought to be arrested and

The causes that have brought about this undesirable state of affairs are not far to seek. Apart from an instinctive hatred felt by the Moslems all over the country towards modern education in the beginning suppressed. The one question with which the Mussulmans were very anxiously concerned was to make sure that in any scheme of mass education formulated and worked by the State, adequate provision is made for the instruction of Moslem boys through the medium of Urdu. If the compulsory primary education is to be introduced and is to come into force at the initiative of the local bodies which will enjoy extensive powers of control and even of taxation, the Mussulmans should have a right to insist on a legislative recognition of their claim that at any rate for the Moslem boys, whose mother tongue is Urdu, it shall be the medium of instruction. The constitution of the Local bodies and passing of the Primary Education Act in 1920 almost killed the Moslem minorities and their script and dialect. There is another matter in regard to which Mussulmans felt very natural apprehension, and this was the question of the religious instruction of the Moslem boys in the primary schools. The period of the primary education is just the period of life when the young mind is most plastic, is directly under the sway of sense-impressions and receives, for good or evil, its initial impulse towards the evolution of character and personality. The Moslem parent would therefore be anxious to see that his boy is getting the necessary religious education along with secular training. This anxiety could have been and can be easily removed by setting apart a period for the religious instruction under communal control, supervised by the department. The Moslem demand for such provision is eminently just and reasonable. His religion is to a Mussulman an actual living reality. So, too, I believe, is his religion to the Hindu. It is to the abiding advantage of both the communities to see that their younger generation are reared in an atmosphere of reverence and faith. " Patriotism " and " Motherland " may be good rousing cries for corporate political action, but religion alone can educate the affection and impart that unity to individual life without which " Patriotism " and " Motherland " are barren superstitions. Mussulmans at any rate cannot afford to let their children grow in an atmosphere of chance morality and convictions reared by accident.

In the year 1926–27 the number of primary schools for boys in C.P. and Berar was 4,182, and there were 315,627 pupils reading in them, out of which 21,317 passed the primary examination; out of these, i.e. 315,627 pupils, there were 31,527 Moslem pupils, and if we go in detail, there are 242 Anglo-Urdu institutions with 17,389 pupils, but there are only two Government institutions. Besides the above there are 20 unrecognised institutions; thus the distribution is: C.P., 64, and Berar 178 schools for primary education of Mussulmans.

As regards the primary schools, teachers, including those employed in the primary classes of the vernacular middle schools, numbered 10,018, and out of these, 8,978 were employed in Municipal and District Council schools and 626 were employed in private-aided schools; of these 769 Moslem teachers are in District Councils and 417 Moslem teachers are in the Municipal schools and 157 Moslem teachers are in recognised private institutions.

MAKTAB, MULLAH AND PATSHALA SCHOOLS.

As regards Maktab, Mulla schools and Hindu Patshalas, following information will be useful, and clearly indicate the mentality of those who are controlling the local bodies.

As regards the training of teachers there are 1,137 scholars reading in the Normal and Training schools, and out of these there are 127 Moslems, but there is only one institution for Urdu teachers, having 87 teachers under training. There are 660 scholarships, out of which there are only 30 for Urdu teachers. Whereas all these scholarships are renewed in the second year and third, 30 reserved for Urdu teachers are not renewed and they are paid only for one year.

HIGH SCHOOL EDUCATION.

The High School Education Act, which was brought into operation in August, 1923, has through the institution of the " High School Education Board " provided an opportunity of bringing public opinion to bear in an increased measure on the problems of secondary education. " The Director of Public Instruction is an ex-officio Chairman and the Deputy Director has been appointed Secretary of the Board by the Local Government. The Board includes also an Inspector of Schools, six head masters, representatives of the University, of the Training College, of Women's education, of Medicine, Commerce, Engineering, Agriculture, the Legislative Council, Local Bodies and minorities and two co-opted members. Considerable powers (including the power of recognition of High Schools and the prescription of courses of study and text books for High and Middle Schools) have been vested in the Board, and the maintenance of an efficient standard of High School education now lies mainly in its hand.

There are 24 Government, 4 Municipal, 15 Aided, and 2 Unaided High Schools. Out of the 15 Aided there are 4 High Schools run by Mussulmans from their private subscription, and out of 24 Government one is a High School for Muhammadan boys. As regards the pupils there were 3,185 students in Government, 302 in Municipal, 1,208 in Aided and 83 in Unaided institutions; total, 5,085, out of which 424 are Mussulman students.

Representation of the Mussulmans in the High School Education Board is only due to the Government nomination, and there are no reserved seats for the Moslems. Through election they have not any remote chance of representation.

Moslem representation in the teaching staff is very small. Following figures will tell their own tale. In the Indian Educational Service there are 12 Europeans and 4 Hindus, out of which there is not a single Mussulman. As regards Inspectors of Schools who are 4 in number, though there is one Mussulman as officiating, but no permanent. Out of 8 Assistant Inspectors of Schools 6 are Hindus, 2 Mussulmans. Of the 74 Deputy Inspectors of Schools 8 are Mussulmans and the rest Hindus. Though there are 6 Inspectresses and Assistant Inspectresses of Schools, out of which not a single one is Mussulman. There are in all 610 teachers in the trained and untrained grade of High and Anglo-Vernacular Schools, out of which 94 are Mussulmans, who are mostly in the lower grade. There are few Europeans still left in the Educational service, but according to the report " the European male element in the services is gradually disappearing owing to the stoppage of recruitment and the retirement of officers," and " it is safe to assume therefore that in the absence of recruitment to fill posts which have long remained vacant, the European element in the Indian Educational service will disappear during the next ten or twelve years at the latest." In other words, as the Moslems have no chance in the recruitment, the services in the Educational Department will fully be monopolised by the Hindus within the next ten or twelve years, and there will hardly be any Moslem to look after the interests of his community in the all-important Educational department.

MEDIUM OF INSTRUCTION.

" The Vernacular, Hindi, Marathi or Urdu, according to local circumstances, was introduced as the medium of instruction in the High Schools in 1922–23." The above is from the Government Report and looks very nice, but in the next paragraph it is written: " The introduction of the vernacular has complicated the problems of administration both with regard to instruction in the schools and with regard to the conduct of examinations. Except in the Muhammadan High School, Amraoti, where Urdu has been prescribed as the medium of instruction, one or other of the two main vernaculars of the province, Marathi or Hindi, has been prescribed in all Government High Schools. To prescribe both vernaculars as media in any one school would be likely to involve a duplication of staff and buildings. Consideration of economy has therefore of necessity limited the prescription to one vernacular for each school, the particular vernacular chosen being the court language of the district. This has led to the sacrifice of the language of minorities." Continuing, the Report said: "In such districts pupils in schools which maintain only one section in the High School classes are faced with the alternative of learning through the medium of a vernacular with which they are not familiar or migrating to schools which provide instructions in their mother tongue."

In other words out of 28 Government and Municipal High Schools there is only one High School at Amraoti which has Urdu as medium of instruction, the doors of all these 27 institutions are closed for Moslem boys whose mother tongue is Urdu. In plain words the Hindu Minister, the Hinduised Educational Department of the C.P. does not wish that Moslem boys should take any advantage of the Government and Municipal High Schools. If there had not been 4 aided Moslem High Schools as against 11 Hindu aided institutions then the outlook for the Moslem secondary education would have been worse.

The Government Report on Education says: "Of the high schools, one is the Government Muhammadam High School, Amraoti. The remaining four are the Anjuman High School, Nagpur, the Anjuman High School, Jubbulpur and the two Bohra High Schools at Burhanpur. . . . There has been a general consolidation and improvement in every circle, and signs are not wanting that the Muhammadan community is taking an increased interest in education. The Inspector of Schools, Nagpur, reports: "Steady rise in the number of Urdu schools indicates the growing desire among the Muhammadan community in the circle to have facilities for educating their children." Continuing, the Report says: "In Berar, where the demand for instruction through the medium of Urdu is most widespread, the Inspector of Schools reports that there is much cause for gratification. The Urdu classes attached to Anglo-Vernacular Schools are now well established and without any apprehension or doubt as to their future. Secondly, the aided and recognised Anglo-Urdu school at Khangaon, and the effort to establish similar institutions at Yeotmal and Kali, are a distinct advance with regard to the attitude of the Muhammadan community. This is the first time in the history of Muhammadan education in Berar that private Muhammadan enterprise has shouldered a part of the burden of secondary education in Berar and there are signs of desire for further advance, and another high school for West Berar is importunately sought for by the community. Their case is now before the Local Government. Besides this, several towns would like to have Anglo-Urdu schools, but the community being poor, private enterprise cannot shoulder the burden."

If one reads the above remarks from the Government Report carefully, he will understand that in spite of the community being poor, the Moslems have taken increased interest in education through private enterprise. The surprising part of the whole show in this province is that the education through the Government agency is confined to Hindus. All the High Schools, Government and Municipal, are reserved for Hindus, except one. The same is the condition as regards Anglo-Vernacular Middle schools. Out of 152 Anglo-Vernacular Middle Schools 11 are for Mussulmans, which are mostly run by Mussulmans privately, aided by Government. Our definite charge against the Hinduised Government of C.P. is that though Mussulmans pay rent, taxes and revenue in proportion to their population, but the doors of the Government institutions are closed for their boys. By making Hindi or Marathi as the medium of instruction in most of the Government and Municipal schools (High and Middle) the Mussulman students had to go away without education or to incur extra expenses and migrate to near-by towns where there is a Moslem Private School, and that is more difficult because of the poverty in the community, and so in many cases they have to remain without any education. Is this not shameful, that out of 28 High Schools controlled by the Government and Municipalities, except one, the remaining 27 are for Hindus and Hindus alone? Not only the teaching staff is Hindu, but the way the admission is done and other reasons, the doors of these institutions are practically closed for the Moslem boys.

Vocational Education. The Government report is silent about the progress of the Mussulmans in the Medical, Engineering and Agriculture education. In fact the position of the Mussulmans in this branch is sadly deplorable. It is still worse than what they have done in other sections. Following figures tell their own tale:—

COMPARATIVE STATEMENT OF PUPILS IN DIFFERENT INSTITUTIONS.

Institutions	Europeans and Anglo-Indians	Indian Christians	Hindus		Mussalmans
			High Caste	Depressed Classes

Law College	1	1	183	0	9
College for teachers training	0	4	103	0	13
Agriculture College ..	0	1	88	6	6

The pitiable position of students of Moslem community in the above institutions is due mainly because of the absence of the Moslems from the teaching staff and also because of the partiality shown in giving admittance in these institutions. Agriculture, Medicine and Engineering is wholly and solely monopolised by the high caste Hindus, and the sooner this monopoly is broken the better for the minorities.

The third difficulty is of not giving any scholarship or stipend to Moslem students. There are 10 scholarships awarded annually to sons of agriculturalists in high schools to encourage them to join the Agriculture College after completing their high school course. For the College itself 16 Scholarships of the value of Rs12 per mensem, of which eleven are available in the Degree Class, are allotted among students of the first year of the intermediate, primarily to the sons of agriculturalists and in accordance with their ability as shown after joining and their means. Eight scholarships of the face value of Rs15 per mensem are available, each year for students in the second part of the course studying for the degree of Bachelor of Agriculture. These stipends are given by the Department of Agriculture and require that the holders will serve in the department on qualifying should the same need their services. In addition there are two scholarships of the annual value of Rs120, the gift of the Society of Agriculture and Industries and tenable in the Intermediate or Certificate classes, and another of Rs13 per mensem, termed the Makrai Scholarship, reserved for students from that State or from the Hoshangabad district. Though for the education in Agriculture so many scholarships and stipend are given, but not a single one is reserved for Mussulmans. The Hindu staff and the Hindu officials distribute this solely to the Hindu boys, and the result is disastrous to our poor community.

In Medicine the same poor result is seen. Though there are scholarships in good number of the value of Rs15 and Rs25, tenable in the Medical School, Nagpur, again the Mussulmans are getting no advantage out of it. The department, being Hinduised from the top to the bottom, has not reserved any scholarship or stipend for the Moslems, all are being awarded year by year to Hindus and that also of high caste.

The same story is of the Engineering School. Unless a fixed number of scholarships are not awarded to Moslems every year this monopoly will not break.

Female Education.—When the condition of the education of Moslem males is so bad, the position of female education is naturally worse. The state of affairs is so bad that to put figures is sheer waste of time. We only state bare facts to show the most pitiable state of affairs regarding Moslem female education.

The above state of affairs is due mainly to the special needs of the community and the Hinduised Government deliberately ignoring those necessities and needs of the Mussulmans as regards the education of girls. The total expenditure on girls' schools was Rs5,15,776, in the year 1926–27 and we dare say that even a fraction is not paid or spent on the Moslem girl education. Whatever we see the number of girls in primary schools, it is being maintained by Moslem private agency aided but mostly unaided by local bodies. In fact, these 5 lakhs are swallowed by the Hindus and spent on the sole education of Hindu girls. There has been no improvement made in the curricula of girls' schools of any grade. No arrangement made by the Education department for the supply of Moslem-trained efficient teachers, and nothing has been done to open separate schools for girls. As in all the Government as well as Local bodies schools Hindi is the medium of instruction, it has been impossible for the Moslem girls to leave their mother tongue and learn a new language, natural result is neither in the past nor in the future any Moslem girl will ever attend any of the Hindi Government or Local Body's school. This is the main cause coupled with the total absence of Moslem lady teachers from the staff. In short, the money spent on female education by the Government and Local Bodies, in which Moslems contribute their fair share, is used only for Hindus, and Moslems are not getting even a fraction of the same.

We have dealt with the deplorable position of Mussulmans in the University education, in the primary, secondary education and vocational training, and in the last paragraph we have dealt with the girls' education. Now we would like to draw your attention to another aspect of the situation. Numerically we, the Mussulmans in these Provinces, are weak and " to adopt numerical proportion as the basis of calculation in the matter of education of such a backward but important community as the Mussulmans of the Provinces is not only unfair but also misleading." Our educational needs should be determined by our status, past history and present condition in the country and the " principle that numerical strength is not the only criterion for determining the question of communal rights and interests has now been accepted as a fundamental principle by the Government of India and Parliament.

In the matter of figures and population of Hindus and Mussulmans there is more than one point to note. For the purpose of numerical strength Hindus count lakhs of untouchables and call them Hindus, but the following will show how the higher class Hindus gain the educational advantages :—

NUMBER OF SCHOLARS OF DIFFERENT RACES.

	Hindu High Caste	Hindu Depressed Class

Middle	31,737	1,358
High	4,168	60

Post graduate ..	62	0

The foregoing will show that although the Depressed Classes outnumber the high caste Hindus in population, in education they are nowhere, and still the number of these illiterate untouchables is counted by the Government in working out the percentage and deciding the fate of Moslem education. Let us examine the literacy of the different castes in comparison to Mussulmans.

The literacy table below will clearly show in average Hindu literacy is much higher than the Mussulmans. As compared with high caste Hindus who are the real monopolists of power, wealth, and education, Mussulmans are nowhere. To add into the Hindus, to make their percentage low, untouchables and Depressed Classes who are still in a very primitive state of civilisation is absolutely wrong. These low caste Hindus are not given any benefit of school, college or University education, and they never get a remote chance of getting any share of office or service. In other words, " their number is always included in calculating the percentage in order to lay the foundation for claiming their share of the benefits, while those benefits are actually monopolised by the caste Hindus to the exclusion of such untouchables and Depressed Classes." If you will read the Government report carefully, you will see that the higher caste Hindus alone flood the educational institutions and services.

There is another aspect of the question which deserves earnest consideration. It cannot be denied that for all practical purposes it is only the urban population which takes to the secondary and collegiate education. Therefore, when estimates are made of the proportionate progress of Mussulmans in the higher education, the total population should not be taken into account, but the calculation should be confined to the urban population. If we see the position of Mussulmans through this way, then it will be clear that our position is still worse.

Though out of a total population of C. P. and Berar, 82 per cent. are Hindus, but their population in towns and municipalities is only 79 per cent. Out of the total population of C. P. and Berar, 4½ per cent. are Mussulmans, but their population in towns and municipalities is 16 per cent., and out of the total population of C. P. and Berar 13 per cent. are Animist, but their population in towns and municipal areas is only 1 per cent.

The above will clearly show that we are 16 per cent. in the towns and municipal areas, and not 4½ per cent., which is the basis of calculation at present. And if further figures are quoted we can prove to the hilt how backward we have become because of the anti-Moslem policy of the Hinduised Government, we, who have been noted for the culture, enlightenment and energy have been so much deliberately neglected as to become one of the " Depressed Classes."

In spite of the fact that the Government of India, through the Honourable Mr. Sharp, in Letter No. 585–595, dated the 3rd April, 1913, invited the attention of all local governments to the subject of Muhammadan education. The Government of India, he said, are " anxious that all reasonable facilities should be provided for the education of this backward community," but though various Local Governments appointed committees to report on the subject our Local Government did nothing of the kind. No scheme for opening Islamic schools was formulated, and no special officer appointed to see that Moslem education received its adequate share of revenue. Here we wish to write and copy in full the opinion of various Government high officials written from time to time on this all-important subject, and would like to show that all these were ignored by the C. P. Government, and since the advent of the Reforms the Hindu Ministers are simply ignoring them purposely.

Sir William Hunter wrote in 1871, and though so many years have passed, his remarks regarding Moslem education are true to-day as they were in 1871, and though the same were written for Bengal they are no less applicable to C. P. Moslems. He wrote : " The truth is that our system of public institution ignores the three most powerful interests of the Mussulman heart. In the first place it conducts education in the vernacular of Bengal, a language which the educated Mussulman despises, and by means of Hindu teachers. The Bengalee schoolmaster talks his own dialect, and a vile Urdu, the latter of which is, to him, an acquired language as much as it is to ourselves. Moreover, his gentle and timid character unfits him to maintain order among Mussulman boys. " Nothing on earth," said a Muhammadan husbandman recently to an English official, " would induce me to send my boy to a Bengalee teacher." In the second place, our rural schools seldom enable a Moslem to learn the tongue necessary for his holding a respectable position in life and for the performance of his religious duties. Every Mussulman gentleman must have some knowledge of Persian, and Persian is a language unknown even in our higher class district schools. Every Mussulman from the highest to the lowest, ought to say his prayers in one of the sacred languages, Persian or Arabic, and this our schools have never recognised. In the third place, our system of education makes no provision for the religious education of the Muhammadan youth. It overlooks the fact that among the Hindus a large and powerful class has come down from time immemorial for the supply of this part of a boy's training, while among the Muhammadans no separate body of clergy exists. Every head of a Mussulman household is supposed to know the duties of his religion, and to be his own family priest. Ministrations are, indeed, conducted at the mosque, but it is the glory of Islam that its temples are not made with hands, and that its ceremonials can be performed anywhere upon God's earth or under His heavens. A system of purely secular education is adopted to very few nations."

In 1854, the Court of Directors, through Sir Charles Wood, in his famous despatch on education wrote :—

> " We shall receive any proposition which may appear to be likely to supply the wants of so large a portion of the natives of India."

Soon after the Hunter Commission made the following recommendations :—

(1) " That the special encouragement of Muhammadan education be regarded as legitimate charge on Local, Municipal and Provincial funds."

(2) " That special standard for Muhammadan Primary schools be prescribed."

(3) " That indigenous Muhammadan schools be liberally encouraged to add purely secular subjects to their courses of instructions."

(4) " That Hindustani (Urdu) be the principal medium for imparting instruction to Muhammadans in Primary and Middle schools except in localities where the Muhammadan community desires that some other language be adopted."

(5) " That the official vernacular in places where it is not Hindustani (Urdu) be added as a voluntary subject to the curriculum of Primary and Middle schools for Muhammadans maintained from the public funds, and that arithmetic and accounts be taught through the medium of that vernacular."

(6) " That where necessary a graduated system of special scholarship for Muhammadans be established ; to be awarded (a) in Primary schools, and (b) tenable in Middle schools."

(7) " That in all classes of schools maintained from public funds a certain proportion of free studentships be expressly reserved for Muhammadan students."

(8) " That in places where educational endowments for the benefit of Muhammadans exist and are under the management of Government, the funds arising from such endowments be devoted to the advancement of education among Muhammadans exclusively."

(9) " That where Muhammadan endowments exist and are under the management of private individuals or bodies inducement by liberal grants in aid be offered to them to establish English-teaching schools or colleges on the grant in aid system."

(10) " That where necessary normal schools or classes for the Muhammadan teachers be established."

(11) "That wherever instruction is given in Muhammadan schools through the medium of Hindustani, endeavours be made as far as possible to appoint Muhammadan teachers to give such instructions."

(12) "That Muhammadan inspecting officers be employed more largely than hereto for the inspection of Primary schools for Muhammadans."

(13) "That associations for the promotion of Muhammadan education be recognised and encouraged."

In 1924, His Honour Sir James (now Lord) Meston in the Government resolution number IV, paragraph 1, in the following words wrote: "It is useless to ignore the fact that in existing conditions the ordinary board schools do not and cannot adequately cater for certain sections of the community and for the education of these sections special measures must, therefore, be taken."

Question of education of Mussulmans was the subject matter of a resolution as early as of the August, 1871, when Lord Mayo wrote :—

(1) Further encouragement should be given to classical and vernacular languages in all schools and colleges.

(2) English schools should be established in avowedly Muhammadan districts; the appointment of qualified Muhammadan English teachers might, with advantage, be encouraged.

(3) As in vernacular schools, so in avowedly English schools, assistance might justly be given to Muhammadans by grant in aid to create schools of their own.

(4) Greater encouragement should also be given to the creation of vernacular literature for the Muhammadans.

The U.P. Government, in their resolution Number 1611/XV, dated 25th August, 1914, sanctioned the appointment of a Muhammadan Inspector for the province and Muhammadan Deputy Inspectors for the different divisions. It further established provincial and district Maktab committees and special provision made to appoint Mussulmans as teachers and as members of the inspecting staff, and the resolution continued, said: "The Boards are being asked to insist that Muhammadan boys be freely admitted and properly treated in schools where Hindus predominate." The resolution further urged, "that special facilities should be given for spreading primary education among the Mussulmans by efficient teaching in the Persian script, and by establishing Moslem schools in any town or village where the attendance of at least twenty boys is guaranteed and by allowing the use of special readers suited to the requirements of the Mussulmans and approved by the Maktab committees."

Every Local Government did something or other to provide facilities for Moslem education, but we in C.P. got nothing out of it. As long as the education was under the pre-Reform system our appeals had a remote chance of acceptance, but since the advent of Reform and Hinduisation of the Education department our claims are not even thought over. In fact, we are being deliberately kept in ignorance. The local bodies, who are aggressively Hinduised, have now the control of the primary education and they purposely do not wish to help Mussulmans in this direction. The Hindus directly and openly wish to kill Urdu, and it is sheer nonsense to expect that they will agree to spend a pie on an education which is done through it. In spite of their wish there are Urdu schools under municipal committees, but every effort is made to starve them of their necessary requirement. It is interesting to note that not a single Urdu school was opened by any local body since same have been democratised. The local bodies are invested with enormous powers and the Act has imposed no check. The primary education being one of the strongest elements in raising the economic, social, and material welfare of a community, the majority used it deliberately, systematically and effectively to kill it.

In this province, the Local Government with successive Hindu ministers did nothing for the Moslem education. It is only private enterprise which is doing something in this direction. No special Muhammadan inspector has been appointed, not even a special officer appointed to look after the Moslem education. Opening of Maktab and Islamia schools was never thought of, even. There is no way and no fixed rules under which the local bodies can be forced to pay even a fraction of their income for the Moslem education. The most thorny question is of language. The Hinduised Government, the local bodies, and the Education department want Mussulmans to learn through an alien language—Hindi; and no Mussulman can agree to leave Urdu and kill his own mother tongue. The paucity of Moslems in teaching staff and in inspecting staff is fast growing and nothing is being done to recruit Moslems for the posts of teachers and as members of the inspecting staff. The same Hindu monopoly reigns in secondary education. Not only that, the doors of all the Government High Schools are closed for Mussulmans because of the medium of instruction which is fixed either Hindi or Marathi. Here, again, the Moslem staff is nowhere seen. In the question of scholarship the Moslems are treated as if they do not exist in the province. In the vocational training, their position is made still worse. Admission in the engineering, agriculture, veterinary, science and medical institutions is confined to Hindus, and under the plea of the test examination Mussulmans are rigidly excluded.

Question of questions as regards Moslem education is the question of language. Though we have referred more than once to this thorny question, we cannot rest content unless we have dealt with it exclusively once more. Primary education and Urdu is one and the same so far as the Mussulmans are concerned. If Urdu is to be sacrificed, we deprive five lakhs of Moslems—and these the best of Moslems, if heredity counts for anything—of their mother tongue, in which they think to-day. In addition to this, we deprive them and the remaining millions of Mussulmans of the consolation which their religion has to offer to them. For our part, we think it is the loss to the latter whose mother tongue is not Urdu that is irreparable. It is possible for Mussulmans, as it is being made possible for Hindus in Northern India, to give up the use of a familiar Persian word or Arabic expression and substitute for it a strange word or expression from Sanskrit for ordinary purposes of life. Time and use would make strange phrases familiar, and time and disuse would make familiar phrases strange. But what of the familiar word and phrase of the religious literature? Language is the expression of thought and where thought differs so radically, as in Islam and Hinduism, can the same language express it adequately in each case? Consider it whatever way you like; it has to be confessed in the end that Urdu is the irreducible minimum to which the most compromising Mussulman could consent. Not that there is no room in Urdu for a larger admixture of Sanskrit words, but they can glide in naturally and smoothly; they cannot be pushed in by force. In the intercourse of India with other Asiatic countries, at least, it is not Sanskrit but Arabic and Persian that will be of use. To exclude from the lingua franca of India the only source of help in its intercourse with other Asiatic countries, is not patriotism, nor business, but sheer imbecility.

This brings us to the question of a script, though we are concerned here mainly with that of language. Islam was neither insular nor peninsular, and if Mussulmans lacked something in their love for the land they lived in, they have been charged with a little too much of it for the lands of others. Their conquests brought them worldly gain and afforded them facilities for conversion. Just as in the case of European nations to-day, commerce follows conquest, in the history of Islam the faith followed the flag. For a world-wide empire a common language was an impossibility, and as we have shown, Arabic was not imposed on the conquered lands. But a common script facilitated a common understanding, and to-day, while Arabic, Persian, Pushto, Urdu and many other languages are used by Moslems, the Arabic script is common to all. Here, again, the irreducible minimum was found by people ready to compromise. Efforts are now being made in India to have a common script. So long as Islam remains a world-wide religion and Mussulmans retain their present sympathies with other Moslems, no matter where they be, Indian Mussulmans cannot give up their present script for Devnagri. We have heard a great deal about the scientific character of the latter, but few of its advocates have examined its suitability for transcription of Arabic words, and all seem to ignore the fact that the Arabic script is, perhaps, the only form of shorthand which is common blessing for many millions. Granting for argument's sake that Devnagri is more scientific, does it entitle it to any greater consideration than that which such a shrewd and businesslike nation as the Americans paid to Mr. Roosevelt's short list of phonetically-spelt words? And, finally, in the matter of script even more than in the case of language, the general adoption of Devnagri to the exclusion of Arabic character would be to curtail the facilities of intercourse between India and other countries. As Punjab, U.P., C.P., and Mussulmans of other provinces only read through Urdu, to force another language with Nagri script on the Mussulmans is to force them to be completely cut off from their brethren outside their province.

The only conclusion at which we can arrive is that neither in the matter of language nor in that of script can the Mussulmans afford to concede more than what they have already done in adopting Urdu as their only vernacular and retaining the script that is practically common to the Islamic world. But unless we take practical steps to safeguard the language and "the script, both are endangered by the narrow and exclusive nationalism" which is growing more and more militant every day.

After dealing with the all-important question of language and script in detail, suffice it to say that as the local bodies are being Hinduised, unless the primary education for the Mussulmans is put on surer ground we have no chance of getting any benefit through them; on the contrary there is going on an active movement to wipe out our language and script. In short, we want Urdu schools for our boys and girls, and that also in good number.

The other condition which is also very important is the inclusion of Moslem teachers in the primary schools. It is far from our wish to state that all Hindu teachers are unsympathetic. But we dare say it with great conviction, and that also after seeing the work of Hindu teachers, that the class of people from which the Primary School teachers are recruited is generally unsympathetic to Moslem students. But this question cannot arise if Urdu primary schools are opened in greater numbers, and as they will be exclusively for Moslems all the teaching staff must come from this very community. The difficulty arises in Anglo-Vernacular Middle Schools. And we are obliged to state that in schools which are almost staffed by Hindu teachers Moslem students are treated badly; their religion is despised and they are exposed to insults and indignities which we as a high-spirited community cannot possibly endure. Many Hindu teachers are now imbued with a missionary spirit and they use all devices to spread Hindu culture and inculcate Hindu ideals in the minds of tender children.

As the education is a transferred subject the Government is helpless, and the Hindu Minister, the Hinduised education department and the Hindu monopolised local bodies, which control the education from the first stage to the last, can do anything they like. We therefore request that our demands should be included into the fundamental safeguards and be put in the constitution of India by Parliamentary statute so that nobody be allowed to touch it in India.

(1) As the majority community has done absolutely nothing for our education, on the other hand they have deliberately tried to kill our language and script and have Hinduised the whole educational department and our claims have been completely ignored, hence our demands in this connection should be embodied into an Act of Parliament and nobody in India from a local body to the highest assembly of the State should be allowed to touch it.

(2) An adequate and substantial share of grant in aid be fixed for Moslem education, and each local body and the Government should be compelled by law to spend such portion of the grant in aid on Moslem institutions.

(3) Provision for instruction to Moslem children in Urdu schools and opening of such Urdu schools where more than ten Moslem students could be found. Maktabs and Mulla schools to be given substantial grants in aid.

(4) Sufficient number of Moslem members in the Education sub-committees of each Local Body.

(5) A special Inspector of Muhammadan education be appointed for the whole province and except Moslem education no other duties should be assigned to him. His office establishment should be an integral part of the office of the Director of Public Instruction. This post must be immediately created, and the same should carry the status and position of a Divisional Inspector.

(6) In every circle there should be an Assistant Inspector of Schools for Moslem education, under whom there should be Deputy Inspectors of Schools in each district to look after Islamic schools and Maktabs.

(7) In each district there should be formed under the law Moslem Educational Committees; their chairman should be a Government Moslem servant of high rank and the Moslem Deputy Inspector as Secretary. The powers of appointment, leave, dismissal, transfer, control of all Islamic schools and Maktabs should be vested in these committees and their position and status should be equal to the Education Sub-Committees of the Local Bodies. And the Local Bodies should not be allowed to take any action on any question regarding Moslem Education unless it comes through this Moslem Educational Committee.

(8) The annual budget prepared by this committee shall be incorporated in the general educational budget of the Local Bodies. Instead of the savings of the budget being lapsed it should be lawful for this Moslem Educational Committee to spend it for the Moslem education.

(9) The Moslem Education Committee shall have power to select candidates for the teachership in the vernacular training schools, training classes and normal schools. The Committee be empowered to correspond directly with the Education Department officials. The Committee should also prepare an annual report on the Moslem education, and it should incorporate all proposals made by the Committee and rejected by the Local Body. The Committee be supplied by the Local Bodies all the figures of general education, so that this committee could make out a comparative statement of Moslem education.

(10) Primary Education should only be given to Moslem boys in Urdu language and through Moslem teachers.

(11) Fixed proportion of free and half-freeships and scholarships for Moslem boys be fixed, and it should not be less than 25 per cent. of the total.

(12) Female education should be under the Moslem Education Committee to be formed as stated above.

(13) Provincial grant for Moslem primary education be separately put under a Provincial Moslem Educational Committee, and the same will alone be responsible for its distribution.

(14) In the Anglo-Vernacular middle schools and high schools Moslem students should not be forced to study through the medium of Hindi. Urdu section should be opened and if no such arrangement is possible, then English should be the medium of instruction for Moslem boys. On no account should Moslem students be forced to read through Hindi. In all schools Urdu classes for Moslem boys be opened enabling them to take Urdu as one of the vernaculars. Where there are sufficient number of students arrangement for teaching of Persian and Arabic as one of the optional classics be made.

(15) In all Government and Municipal Middle and High Schools at least 25 per cent. of the teaching staff should be Mussulmans.

(16) The curriculum of studies for Islamic schools should be drawn by the Provincial Moslem Education Committee.

(17) The High School Education Board should have 25 per cent. of its members from Moslem community and the election of the same be done by Moslem electors, say Moslem graduates, Moslem institutions, etc.

(18) There should be more Muhammadan Government High Schools and Middle schools on the type of the Amraoti Muhammadan High School at different centres.

(19) Moslem representation in the Committee of courses and studies be fixed and no "body" constituted under this High School Education Board should be without Moslem representation.

(20) In the examiners very few Moslems are found and therefore we urge that 25 per cent. of the examiners for the High School and Middle School examinations be from the Moslems.

(21) Moslem girls teachers training school be opened immediately so that trained female teachers be made available.

(22) In the Inspecting Agency sufficient number of Moslem Inspectors of Schools be appointed.

(23) Special High Schools for Mussulmans be opened at least in each division and an Anglo-Vernacular Middle School in each district.

(24) Twenty-five per cent. of all seats be reserved for Moslem students in Engineering, Medical and other vocational institutions and fixed number of scholarships be kept reserved for them. The test examination either should be done away with, otherwise the Mussulmans having the minimum required qualification be taken in the classes of the above schools.

(25) Moslem teachers in the vocational institutions be appointed at once.

(26) In the Agriculture and Training College, seats for Moslem boys be at once reserved and scholarship separately allotted for them.

(27) The Provincial Moslem Education Committee which is to be immediately formed should consist of elected Moslem representatives of the Moslem councillors of C. P. representatives of the Islamia High and Middle Schools; the Director of Public Instruction and the special Inspector of Moslem Education as President and Secretary respectively.

Summary of the Statement on the subject of Municipal Committees of 1928.

ELECTED MEMBERS.

Zero Moslem Members. Election figures for 54 Committees are available. Following 13 Committees are so fortunate as not to get even one elected Mussulman member through the Joint Electorate—(1) Ramtek 8. (2) Katol 11. (3) Tumsar 8. (4) Warora 8. (5) Pulgaon 8. (6) Balaghat 10. (7) Saugor 13. (8) Deori 6. (9) Damoh 13. (10) Chota Chindwara 6. (11) Dhamtari 10. (12) Elichpur C. S. 9. (13) Arvi 16. (Total number of members selected are printed after each Committee's name).

One Mussulman Member. Following 16 Committees could get only one member each through the Joint Election. Total number of members are shown after it—(1) Kalmeshwar 10. (2) Umrer 9. (3) Deoli 6. (4) Sehora 9. (5) Khurai 7. (6) Seoni 12. (7) Seoni Malwa 10. (8) Sohagpur 11. (9) Chindwara 13. (10) Saunsar 8. (11) Narsinghpur 12. (12) Gadarwara 9. (13) Drug 9. (14) Hoshangabad 12. (15) Basim 9. (16) Wun 7.

Two Moslem Members. Following 13 Committees could get only two members through Joint election out of the members noted after each Committee's name. (1) Nagpur 38 (2) Mowar 10. (3) Saoner 10. (4) Pauni 10. (5) Gondia 11. (6) Chanda 11. (7) Nurwara 10. (8) Mandla 12. (9) Betul 13. (10) Pandhurna 12. (11). Murtizapur 9. (12) Shegaon 10. (13) Malkapur 10.

Three Members and more. There were only five Committees in which three Mussulmans came in, and in Akola out of 18 members 4 Moslems were elected, in Harda out of 14 5 Moslems, and in Amraoti and Elichpur city out of 18 members 7 Mussulmans came at each place through the election.

SELECTION.

Figures for selection of members for 46 Municipal Committees are available; out of this there are 31 Committees which had the good fortune of not getting even one Mussulman member through the selection and there are 13 Committees which have secured one Mussulman each, whereas there are out of these 46 Committees only two Committees in which 2 Mussulman members each were selected.

NOMINATED MEMBERS.

Pro-Hindu attitude and tendency of the Local Government can well be shown when we have seen the figures of 55 Committees for which Government nominated members, as many as 2 to 4, and out of these 36 Committees could get no Mussulman. In 19 committees Government nominated one member each and there is not a single Committee which got two nominated members from Moslem Community.

OFFICE BEARERS.

Tale of election of chairmen is better not told. There are 45 Committees of which elections have taken place, out of which 42 Committees got non-Moslems as chairmen (i.e., 40 Hindus, 1 Christian, 1 Parsee) and three Committees got Mussulman chairmen.

As regards vice-chairman, out of 45 Committees 40 are entitled to elect two vice-chairmen each, and there are five Committees which can only elect one vice-chairman, making the total vice-chairmen 85 in number and out of which only 15 are Mussulmans. There are 36 Committees which have no Mussulman vice-chairmen and even two seats of vice-chairmen have been monopolised by the Hindus.

VOTING STRENGTH.

There are 44 Committees of which figures are available, and in which there are 14 Committees of 11 to 14 members which have only one Mussulman to vote. There are 16 Committees of 15 to 48 members in which only two Mussulmans are eligible to vote. There is only one Committee which has three Moslem votes and largest number of Moslem votes is eight out of 26 and 24 in two Committees.

SUMMARY.

The table of 1925–26 shows the state of affairs and the chief points to be noted are :—

(1) Out of fifty Municipal Committees for which efforts have been made to compile the statistics, there are ten, in which not a single Mussulman has been elected.

(2) There are more than ten Committees in which only one seat out of as many as even fourteen seats have been filled in by Mussulmans through election.

(3) There are more than thirteen Committees in in which two seats have been captured by Mussulmans through elections.

(4) Out of selected members there are thirty-seven Committees in which not a single Mussulman member has been selected.

(5) As regards the election of Chairman, there is not more than one Committee in all the fifty Committees where a Mussulman can find himself as Chairman.

(6) Fate of the election of Vice-Chairman is just the same, and in all about one hundred Vice-Chairmen elected there are not even twelve Mussulman Vice-Chairman in the whole province.

(7) Voting strength is just what is anticipated.

(a) There are four Municipal Committees in which not a single elected, selected, nominated member nor any office bearer is Mussulman.

(b) There is not a single Committee in which Mussulmans are more than six out of even fifty-one seats.

(c) There are seven Municipal Committees in which, including Government nominated members, there is only one Mussulman representative.

SUMMARY OF THE ABOVE.

Election. Total number of Boards, for which election of members figures are available, are twenty-nine. Out of these, in sixteen Boards, not a single Mussulman has come in the election. In eight Boards there are one each Moslem member, and in four boards there are two Moslem members each. Largest number of Mussulman members elected are three, and that also in one Local Board.

Appointment of Members by the Government. Figures for twenty-six Boards are available, in which Government have nominated members, and out of these, in six, not a single Mussulman member has been nominated. In eighteen Boards one Moslem each has been nominated, and in two Boards largest number of Moslem members, i.e. two, have been appointed by the Government.

Office-bearers. Out of twenty-three Chairmen elected, not a single Mussulman has been elected, and as Vice-Chairman, out of twenty-three, as many as twenty-one are Hindus.

Voting Strength. There is one Board of sixteen members, with Zero Moslem members. There are fourteen Boards, with ten to nineteen members having only one Mussulman in the following order: One Board of ten members, three Boards of fourteen, fifteen and eighteen members; two Boards of nineteen members; three Boards each of ten, sixteen and thirteen members. In six Local Boards there are only two members from Mussulmans, and there is only one Board where we find three Mussulmans, and another one with a total of twenty votes having six Mussulmans.

SUMMARY OF ABOVE.

Election. Out of six Councils, in one Council of twenty-four members, and in which district 78,348 Mussulmans live, not a single Mussulman has come in through election, and in one only one Mussulman member has been elected. Two members came in three Councils, and there is only one Council in which three Mussulmans came as elected members.

Selection. This is another name of Co-option, and out of six Councils, as many as five have no Mussulman as selected member, and in one there is the solitary exception of one member.

Appointment by the Government. Out of five Councils for which the Government made the appointments, there are two Councils in which the Hindu Minister for Local Self-Government quite forgot to nominate, even out of four and five, and in the remaining three Councils the Government nominated one Mussulman member each out of as many as three to six members.

Office-bearers. In all the Councils, not a single Mussulman has been elected either as Chairman or Vice-Chairman, and hence all the five Councils have Hindu Office-bearers.

Voting Strength. Out of thirty-seven votes of Akola District Council, there is one Moslem vote, and in the remaining four Councils three Moslem votes are found in total votes of twenty, twenty-six, thirty-one and thirty-two.

SUMMARY.

Out of twenty-four Cotton Market Committees, there is no Mussulman member appointed by the Government in fifteen Committees, and one member each has been appointed from the Moslems in eight Committees. The only one Local Board for mining area in Chindwara has, out of nine members, one Mussulman. As regards the Grain Market Committees, the Government, out of five members, thought fit not to appoint even one member from the Mussulmans.

SUPPLEMENT TO THE CASE OF MUSSULMANS OF CENTRAL PROVINCES AND BERAR SUBMITTED BY THE MOSLEM DEPUTATION ON 15TH MARCH, 1929, AT NAGPUR (C.P.)

Copy of the Resolutions passed at the All-Parties Moslem Conference of C.P. and Berar, held on 26th January, 1929, at Jubbulpore under the Presidentship of Mr. Mobinur Rahman, B.A., LL.B., M.L.C., of Berar :—

(1) This Conference accords its approval to the case of the Mussulmans of C.P. and Berar prepared by Mr. Taj-ud-din, subject to the following modifications :—

A. Full Provincial autonomy should be given to Provincial Government and the representation of the Mussulmans in the Cabinet should be guaranteed. All those subjects which affect the interests of the Moslem community should be included in the portfolio of the Moslem member of the Cabinet.

B. The present representation of the Mussulmans of the Central Provinces by one member in the Assembly election is exceedingly inadequate. The failure to give any representation to the Mussulmans of Berar in the Legislative Assembly has proved exceedingly injurious to that part of the province. On the assumption that the Lower House will consist of 500 members and the Upper House of 200 members, the number of Moslem members in the former shall be seven, including two from Berar and in the latter three including one from Berar.

C. The proportion of the Moslem members for C.P. and Berar in the Provincial Legislature shall be three to two.

D. Whereas the position of the Moslems in the C.P. and Berar is one which is historically, politically and numerically no less important than any other and no less than most, their interest shall receive proper adequate and effective safeguard in the constitution and their representation therein shall be 25 per cent. of the total strength in the Provincial Legislature provided that where the Mussulmans constitute more than 25 per cent., they shall receive representation in proportion to their population.

E. That this conference conveys its thanks to Mr. Taj-ud-din for the labour and expense in preparing the case of the Mussulmans in the Province.

(2) This conference supports whole-heartedly the resolutions passed at the All-Parties Moslem Conference held at Delhi under the Presidentship of the Aga Khan.

(3) This Conference appoints a deputation of the following members with power to co-opt to wait upon the Royal Statutory Commission to put up the case of Mussulmans of C.P. and Berar published by Mr. Taj-ud-din and amended by this Conference :—

(1) Mr. Mobinur Rahman, M.L.C.
(2) K. B. Syed Zakir Ali, I.S.O.
(3) Shamshul Ulma Molvi Mohammad Amin Sahib.
(4) Mr. Hifazat Ali, M.L.C., Ex-Minister.
(5) Mr. Taj-ud-din.
(6) Mirza Rahman Beg Sahib.
(7) Mr. Majid-ud-din, M.L.C.
(8) Dr. Yusuf Shareef, Barrister.
(9) K. B. Hafiz Willayat, Ullah, I.S.O.
(10) Mr. Abdul Razzaq, Pleader.
(11) Mr. Abdul Raheem Khan, Pleader.
(12) Mr. Vakil Ahmad Sahib Rizvi Sahib, M.L.C.
(13) Mr. Akber Khan Sahib, Malguzar.
(14) Mr. Syed Abdul Hadi, Municipal Commissioner.
(15) Haji Mohammad Khan Sahib, Merchant.
(16) Malak Sahib, son of K.B.H.M. Malak Sahib.
(17) Abdul Raheem Sahib, Pleader.

SUPPORT FROM PUBLIC BODIES, ASSOCIATIONS AND PUBLIC MEETINGS.

Mussulmans in mass public meetings held at the following places gave whole-hearted support to the Memorandum in the following words :—

" Mussulmans of assembled in public meeting do hereby declare that we support wholeheartedly the Memorandum published by Mr. Taj-ud-din of Jubbulpore, on behalf of the Mussulmans of C.P. and Berar and resolve that the demands formulated therein are most essential for the safeguard of our rights and unless the same are incorporated in the constitution of the country by British Parliamentary Statute, the new contemplated constitutional changes shall not be acceptable to us."

(2) This Conference accords its approval to the case of the Mussulmans of Central Provinces and Berar prepared by Mr. Taj-ud-din subject to the following modifications :—

(a) Full provincial autonomy should be given to the Provincial Governments and the representation of the Mussulmans in the Cabinet should be guaranteed. All those which affect the interests of the Mussulman Community should be included in the portfolio of the Moslem Member of the Cabinet.

(b) The representation of the Mussulmans of the Central Provinces by one member in the Assembly election is exceedingly inadequate. The failure to give any representation to the Mussulmans of Berar in the Legislative Assembly has proved exceedingly injurious to that part of the Province. On the assumption that the Lower House will consist of five hundred members and the Upper House of two hundred members, the number of Moslem members in the former should be seven, including two from Berar, and in the latter three, including one from Berar.

(c) The proportion of the Moslem members for Central Provinces and Berar in the Provincial Legislature shall be three to two.

(d) Whereas the position of the Moslems in Central Provinces and Berar is one which is historically, politically and numerically no less important than any other, and no less than most, their interest shall receive proper adequate and effective safeguards in the constitution, and their representation therein shall be 25 per cent. of the total strength in the Provincial Legislature provided that wherever in Local Bodies Mussulmans constitute more than 25 per cent. they shall receive representation in proportion to their population.

(e) That this Conference conveys its thanks to Mr. Taj-ud-din for the labour and expense in preparing the case of the Mussulmans of the Province.

15th March, 1929.

PRESENT :

ALL THE MEMBERS OF THE COMMISSION (EXCEPT LORD BURNHAM AND MAJOR ATTLEE), AND OF THE CENTRAL COMMITTEE (EXCEPT MR. KIKABHAI PREMCHAND AND SIR ZULFIQAR ALI KHAN).

Deputation from the Moslems of the Central Provinces and Berar.

The deputation consisted of the following :—

Khan Bahadur HAFIZ WILAYATULLAH, B.A., I.S.O., Retired Deputy Commissioner (Spokesman).

Mr. M. Y. SHAREEF, M.A., LL.B. (Cantab.), Bar-at-Law.

Mr. ABDUR RAHEEM KHAN, B.A., LL.B. (Alig.), Mining Proprietor.

Mr. ABDUL RAZZAQ KHAN, B.A., LL.B. (Alig.), High Court Pleader.

Mr. TAJ-UD-DIN, Merchant.

Mr. MAHFOOZULKABEER, B.A., LL.B., Pleader.

Mr. HAJI QAZI MUHAMMAD KHAN, General Merchant.

Nawab MIR MEHDI ALI KHAN, Landholder and Jagirdar, Berar.

Mr. SYED ABDUL HADI, Municipal Commissioner.

* * * * * * * *

5. The Chairman : What I would like to know from you first of all is whether you have any observations to make * * * as regards the future ? (Khan Bahadur Wilayatullah). In order to be effective and adequate, we want more representation, because the Muhammadans, though they are numerically so few here, belong to a very important community and in view of the anticipated increase in the powers under the reforms which may, perhaps, be granted to India, we think that our position should be made secure and strong, and for that reason we want increased representation.

6. But if we consider what is called the " Lucknow Pact," my recollection is that 15 per cent. is suggested as the Muhammadan percentage out of the total Indian seats ?—But now actually we get only about 12 per cent. out of the fifty-five seats.

7. It is correct to say, is it not, that there are fifty-five elected seats, of which forty-eight are of general constituencies, whether they be Muhammadan or non-Muhammadan, whether they be urban or rural, and the other seven are special constituencies, for instance, the University seats ?—In fact our contention has been that we should have been given 15 per cent. out of the fifty-five.

8. I quite follow that. Then none of the members of the special constituencies are, in fact, Muhammadans ?—No.

9. I quite follow what you say. So, of the elected seats, whether they are general or whether they are special, what you say is that you do, in fact, get seven out of a total of fifty-five seats ?—Yes. Practically, sir, the special constituencies have not benefited us in any way.

10. The Chairman : There is a passage in the Government Memorandum which I might read, because everyone has not got the book. It says this : " Muhammadan representation is greatly in " excess of the proportion of Muhammadans to the " rest of the population, but the number of con- " stituencies allotted to them is considered to be the " minimum that would afford the community any " effective representation." I understand the point of the deputation is that they really think that the minimum should be raised ?—Yes.

11. I think I am right that there has been only one case in the Central Provinces where there has been a Muhammadan Minister ?—Yes, he was a Minister for a month or two.

12. And that was during the second Council ?—Yes.

13. Has not there been any other case ?—No.

14. Then comes the question of representation in the Central Legislature. Have you got anything to say about that, Khan Bahadur ?—If the Legislative Assembly were to consist of five hundred members, we would say that there should be seven from the Central Provinces and Berar ; and the proportion between the Central Provinces and Berar may be fixed at 4 to 3.

15. At present there is one Moslem member, is it not ?—Yes, for the Central Provinces only.

16. When you spoke of seven for the province out of five hundred, were you limiting yourself to the Moslems ?—Yes.

17. May I ask how many non-Moslem members are you contemplating from the Province for the Central Legislature ?—Twenty-one.

18. I thought so. Your idea is that your representation should be 25 per cent. ?—Yes.

19. I think you would just like to say a word or two on the subject of what is sometimes called representation in the services, would you not ?—We want also some reservation of posts ; I mean to say, we want some guarantee that a fair proportion of posts will be given to the Muhammadans. At present, and especially since the Reforms, we have been seeing that the Muhammadan element is being eliminated.

20. I have had some figures taken out which show the extent to which at present the Moslems take their share in the public services. Did you see the figures which are contained in a return supplied to the Legislative Council recently ?—In the judicial service ?

21. In all the services. I notice this point has been mentioned, among other things, by Mr. Taj-ud-din in his Memorandum, which I have carefully gone through. Take, for instance, the subordinate revenue service,* I mean tahsildars and naib-tahsildars. I am informed that there the Moslems are thirty-four out of the total ; in other words they are 19 per cent. I am told that in the provincial executive service there are twenty-five Muhammadans out of one hundred and six ; in the provincial judicial service there are nine out of one hundred and thirty-eight. I am not quite clear. Do you think, Khan Bahadur, that as things are in this province, the Moslems are not getting a considerable share of the posts ? I quite understand your asking for more ; it is human nature for everybody to ask for more.—The belief of the Muhammadans in this province is that they are not getting a fair share.

22. You might tell me, has there been a return given in the Legislative Council recently which shows what the proportions secured by the Moslem community are ?—It may be, sir, that in a particular department, there may be a reasonable and fair proportion of Muhammadans, but in other departments like the judicial, public works, secretariat and others, and in ministerial posts generally, there are very few Muhammadans.

23. You see, Khan Bahadur, we are practical people, and we want practical suggestions. What is the method of form you would suggest by which this grievance is to be corrected ?—A minimum standard of qualification may be fixed, and none below that may be appointed, but so long as men possessing those qualifications from the Moslem community are available, they may be given the appointments.

24. Are you suggesting that this should be put into some Act of Parliament ?—I do not want inefficient persons, and persons possessing less qualifications than those which are prescribed for particular posts, to be appointed.

25. I would be quite frank with you, as I have tried to be with everybody. What I should value very much would be the view of the deputation as to how their desire is to be secured. That is a practical point which we have to consider. Of course, I quite understand the plan that you should secure a good number of seats in the Legislature, because that is done by statute or by statutory rules. But what I want to know is how is it proposed to secure a particular proportion of the ministerial posts, or if you like, judicial posts ; do you think it should be done by statute ?—Yes. Anyhow, this is a thing which we desire, and we would leave it to the Commission to make that safeguard for us in whatever way they may consider it feasible.

26. I think that brings out the main points of your deputation, does it not ?—Yes.

27. Colonel Lane-Fox : I want to be clear on one point. Your community are 3 per cent. of the total population of the province ?—Yes.

28. Though you are 3 per cent., you have now 12 per cent. of the elected Indian seats in the Council, and you want more ?—Yes.

29. Mr. Cadogan : I should like to ask a question about your complaint that a sufficient number of posts for your community in the administrative services are not given. Take for example irrigation. On page 472 of your Memorandum you say : " The posts are filled by the Indian Service of " Engineers, Engineers in the Provincial Service, " and below them are upper and lower Subordinate " Services. The position of the Moslems in this " branch is far more deplorable than in any trans- " ferred subject. Out of five Executive Engineers, " four are Hindus and one is a Moslem." I take it that these four Hindus and one Moslem obtained their posts by open competitive examination, is that so ?—They were appointed by selection from outside.

30. I am talking of the engineers. They must have really competed for the examination ?—There is no local examination. I know that the engineers in the Irrigation department were all imported from the Punjab and other places.

31. They have not been through any examination at all ?—No, not in this province.

The Chairman : May I interrupt ? I think it will be agreed, won't it, that the really important things are the provincial services in the executive, judicial and police branches ; these are the main ones. I have got some figures before me which show that in the executive branch of the provincial service here there are 25 Muhammadans out of 106 ; in the judicial branch there are nine out of 138, and in the police branch there are five Muhammadans out of 19. These seem to be the actual figures.

32. Mr. Cadogan : What is the actual nature of the complaint ? You used the word " eliminated." But how ?—We find that our number is becoming less and less gradually in the services.

33. Do you say that you have not got the same opportunity of obtaining posts in the services ? Is it due to any prejudice against your community ?—Whatever it may be due to, we find that in spite of qualifications there are difficulties in the way of the Muhammadans getting appointments.

34. Dr. Suhrawardy : Kindly turn to page 498 of your supplementary Memorandum wherein you say : " A full provincial autonomy should be given " to provincial governments and the representation " of the Mussulmans in the Cabinet should be " guaranteed. All these subjects which affect the " interests of the Moslem community should be " included in the portfolio of the Moslem member of " the Cabinet." I find that you bitterly complain of the elimination of the Muhammadans under the Dyarchical system and yet you demand full provincial autonomy. Will you kindly explain what you mean by this ?—We recommend provincial autonomy on the terms we have indicated, viz. : If our representation is increased and we are represented also in the Cabinet. Of course we are opposed to the transfer of Law and Order. If the safeguards that we ask for are taken into account then we would advocate provincial autonomy, but still we are very doubtful about the transfer of Law and Order. What we want is our position to be safeguarded.

35. That is to say you will not agree to full provincial autonomy unless you have representation of the Mussulmans in the Cabinet guaranteed ?—Yes, that is so.

36. The Chairman : Your impression is that the number of Muhammadans in the services is getting less and less. I do not imagine that you have got any figures now to prove your statement. I have got in front the detailed figures at present, but perhaps your deputation might give us some figures for some years back which will show how the matter stands. I may tell you that looking at the figures I have before me I get a different impression of the matter. I quite understand the desire of Muhammadans to have a larger number of posts ; it is perfectly natural and legitimate ; but I have no information before me which suggests that they are getting less and less. Let us take, for instance, the subordinate service—tahsildars and naib-tahsildars. The fact is that though the Muhammadans are 3 per cent. of the population they have got 19 per cent. of the tahsildars and naib-tahsildars posts ; they are 34 out of the total. If you say that that is less it means that at some earlier stage they had much more than that. I do not expect you to have the figures now, but you see the point is an important one. We would like to get the information if you could supply us ?—(Mr. Shareef) May I say a word, sir ? There are some departments, such as the executive lines, in which probably it has been found that the Muhammadans are better executive officers than the members of other communities. For that reason, in those departments, the Muhammadans have got a greater percentage of posts. But in other departments, such as the judicial, we have not got sufficient representation.

37. Is it not a possible view that just as there are some departments in which the Muhammadans are particularly suitable and therefore they have an exceptionally large proportion, there may be some other departments in which in all respects they may not necessarily be particularly suitable. You cannot be best in everything.—There I agree, sir, but experience has shown that we are not wanting in the necessary qualifications for any department.

38. I am not doubting it for a moment. You see one has to try to look at the thing as a whole. I am very anxious about it because I may tell you that the view which you gentlemen have expressed is a view which has been expressed with great force and moderation in all parts of India by your community, and as I have often said, the object of the Conference is merely to ascertain the facts and to make a perfectly clear and impartial statement as to how it stands. I should like your deputation to give us sufficient facts to distinguish from a mere general expression.—Can we supplement hereafter ?

39. The Chairman : I would be grateful if you could do that. If you could supply us the figures we would be able to compare them with those contained in the return given to the Legislative Council recently. The figures in front of me rather seem to show that in this province a good deal of care in fact is being taken to secure to the Mussulmans a due share.—(Mr. Shareef) The grievance is with regard to the transferred subjects. In regard to reserved subjects the Government makes the appointments, but as regards the transferred subjects there is a grievance.

40. But I understand that your deputation comes before us to tell us that you are in favour of transferring everything ?—My colleague submitted that if we have all the necessary safeguards to protect the minority communities, then certainly it is all very well to have complete autonomy, but otherwise we are not in favour of it but would rather have Dyarchy as it is. In fact we would like to have, as long as we have not reached the same level of progress as other communities, some arbiter, somebody who sees that justice is done to the other communities, to the minorities especially.

The Chairman : I think that was the point Dr. Suhrawardy was putting to you. He pointed out to you that you were expressing an opinion in favour of provincial autonomy and he asked you how you would reconcile it with your other remarks. Anyhow we will see the point. I can assure you that this is not the first time we have heard of it.

APPENDIX (vide Q. 21).

PACHMARHI,

4th June, 1929.

When he had heard the Muhammadan deputation at Nagpur, Sir John Simon asked me to prepare statements showing the percentage of Muhammadans in the Provincial and Subordinate Services of the Central Provinces in 1919 and 1929 respectively. I now forward the statements in question. It will be seen that there has been practically no change in the proportion for the Provincial Services. In the Subordinate Services, although the percentage has fallen slightly, it is still many times as large as the proportion of Muhammadans to the rest of the population, namely, 3 per cent.

Memorandum submitted by the All-India Depressed Classes Association.

On behalf of the All-India Depressed Classes Association, I have the honour to submit the Memorandum attached herewith for your consideration.

ALL-INDIA DEPRESSED CLASSES ASSOCIATION.

2. This Association represents about six crores of people or one-fifth of the population of India which has been denied all social, political and economic rights. It is extremely poor and backward in education and has been treated by the Hindu society as worse than human beings.

3. Most of the members of this community are labourers and as long as property qualification is insisted on this community stands no chance of being included in the electorate and thus exerting its influence in the affairs of the country.

4. In a general electorate this community has no chance of having its representatives selected to the Councils and Local Bodies owing to the prejudice of the other communities against it coupled with the poverty of the members of this community. It is for this reason that we ask for the separate communal electorates.

PUBLIC SERVICES.

5. The members of this community are excluded almost entirely from public services. Communal representation offers the only chance of insuring their admission into the services.

6. The Executive Committee has nominated the following persons to appear before the Royal Commission to give evidence.

Rao Bahadur M. C. Rajah, Member of the Legislative Assembly, St. Thomas Mount, Madras.
Mr. B. C. Mandal, B. A., 203–1 Harrison Road, Calcutta.
Mr. D. Roy, M.A., B.L., 12 Beehu Chatterji Street, Calcutta.
Veeraratha Devidas Jatao, Sadar Bazar, Delhi.
Swani Achhutanand, Editor, Adi Hindu, Col Ganj, Cawnpore.
Babu Khemchand Bohare, Municipal Commissioner and Member, District Board, Agra.
Mr. N. D. Bhosle, Clerk Road, Bombay No. 11.
Mr. G. M. Thaware, Sadar Bazar, Nagpur.
Mr. V. D. Makesar, Superintendent, Chokhamela Hostel, Yeotmal.
Mr. J. G. Sonone, Patipure, Yeotmal.
Mr. L. K. Ogle, M.L.C., Badnera Road, Amraoti.
Mr. Paghunath Shiwaram Shambarkar, Jobber, Express Mills, Nagpur.
Mr. R. S. Nikalje, J.P., Clerk Road, Bombay No. 11.
Mr. J. J. Munuswamy Pillai, M.L.C., Sath Villas, Ootacamund.
Mr. G. A. Gavai, M.L.C., Mahal Tekdi Road, Amraoti.

(Signed) J. H. GAVAI,
General Secretary,
All-India Depressed Classes Association.

MEMORANDUM.

1. (a) Every adult with an annual income of Rs.96/– should have a right to vote for the Legislative Council, Municipality and Local Boards.

(b) Election should be by direct voting, and by ballot in all the bodies.

The representation of the Depressed Classes on the Council of State and the Legislative Assembly should be by nomination on the recommendation of the All-India Depressed Classes Association and the number of the Depressed Classes to be nominated should be one-sixth of the total strength of these bodies.

(c) Communal interest should be safeguarded by means of communal representation based on communal electorates as follows:—

(a) Brahmins.
(b) Muhammadans.
(c) Depressed Classes.
(d) Non-Brahmins.

The number of representatives of each community should be in proportion to its population. Economic interests may continue to be represented as at present. University seats should be abolished, and no voter should be required to travel more than two miles to record his vote.

(d) (e) (f). At present there is no community of interest between the electors and the persons elected; in fact their interests are opposed to each other.

At present there are no real parties in the Council. Voting proceeds mainly on communal, territorial, linguistic and personal grounds. Real representation and real parties can, under existing conditions, emerge only out of communal electorates.

Nomination of officials is necessary. Nomination of non-officials to represent important minorities is also necessary. But in no case should fictitious nomination be made such as a Brahmin lawyer aspiring to the post of a sub-Judge to represent factory labour, or a Brahmin liberal politician representing the factory labour in the Assembly.

Over represented communities should not be allowed to capture further seats through the back doors of nomination, as in the case of a Brahmin lawyer and a Brahmin lady in the Central Provinces Council.

4. (a) We are not in favour of complete Provincial Autonomy, but having regard to our numbers and therefore to our large interests in the government of the country, we are of opinion that one of the Executive Councillors should be a member of the Depressed Classes.

7. Courts and Judiciary should be so constituted by legislation that there may be representatives of different communities on these in order that the people may have confidence in the administration of justice.

8. (d) Caste system in the Hindu community, with consequent social inequality, is thoroughly inconsistent with ideas of democracy. As long as social inequality remains, political equality is impossible. The Brahmin is responsible for imposing the caste system, and for perpetuating it. In this system the Depressed Classes are relegated to the lowest position, and six crores of them forming one-fourth of the population of British India are actually treated as untouchables, unhearables and unseeables, and access to public wells, temples, schools, roads, serais, rivers, tanks, etc., is denied to them, and several other indignities have been imposed upon them, and they are actually treated as worse than animals. Their efforts to secure equal rights with others in these respects, as also the efforts of social reform societies like the Satya Shodhak Samaj have been stoutly opposed by the Brahmins. At present they have practically got the monopoly of all the Government offices, and they have always made use of their official and unofficial power to keep this community in its depressed condition. Whenever the untouchables have come into conflict with the Brahmins and caste Hindus in their struggle for securing their just rights, the British officials, instead of throwing their support on the side of natural justice, have shown a desire to keep the caste Hindus satisfied. Under existing conditions, emancipation of this large community from social slavery seems possible only by legislation backed up by determination on the part of British officials to secure to this community its ordinary rights of humanity. This social ostracism of the untouchables is causing them enormous economic and political loss.

7. 10 (c) There should be proportionate representation of all communities in all public services. At present the Depressed Classes forming one-fifth of the population of British India are almost entirely excluded from these services.

(e) In recent years there has been considerable Indianisation of higher services, but there is not a single member of the Depressed Community throughout India who has derived any benefit from this change. Indianisation, as carried out in recent years, has resulted in the transfer of power into the hands of people who are unsympathetic towards the interests of the Depressed Classes. For a long time to come the Depressed Classes will require protection while they are going through the struggle to improve their position, and this protection means a strong British element in the higher services capable of understanding the real issue and giving necessary protection to the Depressed Classes during the period of their legitimate struggle.

11. As a result of continued neglect of this community, it has lagged far behind the other classes in education. Justice demands that more public revenues should be spent, and special efforts be made by the State, to educate the members of this community. The members of this community being very poor, it is necessary to help the students liberally with scholarships. It is also necessary to liberally provide hostels for these boys. The tendency to deliberately pluck the students of the Depressed Classes in examinations seems to be on the increase. This is due to the hostility of the higher classes to the educational advancement of the members of these classes.

SUPPLEMENTARY MEMORANDUM.

I. PRELIMINARY.

(i) Population. The Depressed Classes in the Central Provinces and Berar are about 3,000,000 or about 25 per cent. of the whole population.

(ii) Social inequality. Owing to the caste system, for the imposition and perpetuation of which the Brahmins are responsible, the Depressed Classes are relegated to the lowest position, and they are actually treated as untouchables, unhearables and unseeables. Access to public schools, roads, wells, tanks, rivers, serais, temples, etc., is denied to them and several other indignities have been imposed upon them. In short, they are actually treated as worse than animals. Their efforts to secure equal rights with others in these respects as also the efforts of social reform societies like the Satya Shodhak Samaj have been stoutly opposed by the Brahmins. Thus they have been denied all social, political and economic rights, causing them their enormous economic and political loss. This caste system coupled with its consequent social inequality is thoroughly inconsistent with ideas of democracy. As long as social inequality remains, political equality is impossible.

(iii) Protection. Under existing conditions, whenever the so-called untouchables have come into conflict with the Brahmins and the caste Hindus in their struggle for securing their just rights, the British officials, instead of throwing their support on the side of the natural justice have shown a desire to keep the caste Hindus satisfied. Indianisation as carried on in recent years has also resulted in the transfer of power into the hands of people who are unsympathetic towards the interests of the Depressed Classes, with the result that there is no guaranteed protection.

(iv) Representation. Most of the members of this community are labourers and property qualifications give them no chance of being included in the electorate and thus exerting its influence in the affairs of the provinces and those of the country. As also in the general electorate this community has no chance of having representatives elected to the central and provincial legislatures and also local bodies owing to the prejudice of other communities. Representation on a very small scale has been given to this community by nomination on the provincial legislature and on some local bodies, with the result that they can exert almost no influence.

(v) Public Service. At present the Brahmins have practically got the monopoly of all Government Offices. The Depressed Classes are excluded almost entirely from public services. This has resulted in creating and increasing the doubt in the minds of the Depressed Classes about the judiciary of these provinces.

II. RECOMMENDATIONS.

(i) Franchise. Every adult with an annual income of Rs. 96 should have a right to vote for the Legislative Council, Municipality and Local Bodies. Franchise for the Central Legislature should be sufficiently lowered for the Depressed Classes.

(ii) Method of Election. Election should be by direct voting and by ballot in all the bodies.

(iii) Representation. There should be only a communal representation and not also a class representation at the very time till at least 1950, strictly in proportion of their population. There should be five communal divisions as follows:

(a) Brahmins,
(b) Non-Brahmins,
(c) Depressed Classes,
(d) Muhammadans,
(e) Non-Hindus and Non-Muhammadans.

We entirely agree to the principle of election by separate electorate. But considering our present economic and educational condition, we think that for the next twenty years representation of the Depressed Classes of these provinces on the provincial and central legislatures may be made by nomination on the recommendations of the All-India Depressed Classes Association, and not as at present on the recommendations of officials—most of them are caste Hindus, by whom right type of persons are not recommended. Hence the opinion of the educated section of the Depressed Classes should be taken.

Nomination of officials is also necessary.

We are not in favour of complete provincial autonomy. And having regard to our members and therefore our large interests in the government of the province and having regard particularly to the constant prejudice of the caste Hindus against this community in these provinces, we are of opinion that one of the members of the provincial cabinet should be from the members of the Depressed Classes.

(iv) Strength of the legislatures. Strength of legislature of the province as also that of the Legislative Assembly and Council of State should be increased, and there should be no second chamber for the Province.

(v) Public Services. As the Brahmins have practically got the monopoly of all the government offices at the entire exclusion of the Depressed Classes and other backward communities, communal representation offers them the only chance of insuring this community into the services. And in order that the people may have confidence in the administration and justice of the province, different communities should have proportionate representation in all kinds of public services, viz., (a) Police, (b) Judicial, (c) Executive and (d) Administrative.

(vi) Education. As a result of the continued neglect of the Depressed Classes coupled with the tendency to pluck the students due to the hostility of the caste Hindus towards them, they have lagged far behind the other classes in education. This community being very poor, justice demands that more public revenues should be spent and special efforts be made by the State to educate them. Hence we think it necessary to liberally provide hostels for the boys, to give special scholarships to the girls, and to give other educational facilities to the boys and girls of these classes.

(vii) Protection. Under existing conditions the Depressed Classes will require protection for a long time to come, while they are going through the struggle to improve their position. This protection means a strong British element in the higher services capable of understanding the real issue and giving necessary protection to them during the period of their legitimate struggle. Emancipation of this large community from social slavery seems possible only by social legislation backed by determination on the part of the British Officials to secure to this community its ordinary rights of humanity.

Memorandum submitted by the Central Provinces Depressed Classes Association.

We, the accredited representatives of the Depressed Classes of the Central Provinces, beg to submit the following for the kind and favourable consideration of the Commission.

The Depressed Classes, which in spite of the benefits of the Western education, are supposed by the Hindus to cause pollution to the temples and wells, ordinarily resorted to by them (Hindus), and are on that account forbidden to them, form 20 per cent. of the total population of the province. They are the most down-trodden people of India, and, having due regard to the treatment which they have received at the hands of the Hindus in the past, they need special consideration for safeguarding their political rights and entity in the formulation of the next instalment of reforms.

In the past for a long time even the public schools were closed to them and the benefits of education were denied to them. They were not free to follow avocations other than the ones which were followed by their ancestors. The necessary result of Hindu oligarchy has been that the bulk of the Depressed Classes is illiterate and very poor.

In the last instalment of reforms the constituencies were unfortunately formed into Muhammadan, the special, and the Non-Muhammadan, the general, and they were included with the Hindus in the latter. On account of the poverty of their classes and the high franchise the bulk of their population could not have the voter's qualification, and owing to lamentable general illiteracy they were not able to make an intelligent exercise of the franchise in their interest. Their inclusion in the general constituency only resulted in swelling the numbers of their tormentors, the Hindus, who are responsible for their present unenviable remained position in the polity of the country.

It is, therefore, humbly submitted that in the next instalment of reforms which are under consideration they should be granted the following:—

1. Governor's power of veto and certification should be maintained, and for the protection of minority interests he should be further invested with powers of control, superintendence and supervision ;

2. Separate representation in the Legislatures and all public bodies including the University in proportion to their numerical strength ;

3. Posts in Government Services and all public bodies should be left open to them, and the minimum qualification absolutely necessary should be required of them ;

4. They must be given a representative in the Cabinet to protect and advance their interests, and his salary, and the vote of confidence in him should depend exclusively on their votes ;

5. Having regard to the fact that they have been exploited in the past to the advancement of the Hindu community, they should be given special grants for education, and

6. No Bill, nor any clause thereof, nor any resolution affecting them or other minorities in the province, shall be proceeded with if three-fourths of the members of the community or interests affected by it, are opposed to it.

In conclusion, we humbly and respectfully hope that the above would receive favourable consideration and be guaranteed to them in the proposed Government of India Act, for which we shall ever remain, as in the past, loyal to the Crown and pray for the continuation and prosperity of the British Empire.

The deputation of the All-India Depressed Classes Association and the Central Provinces and Berar Depressed Classes Association.

The deputation consisted of :—

All-India Depressed Classes Association :—
Mr. G. A. GAVAI, M.L.C., General Secretary (Spokesman).
Mr. DEVIDASS JATAO (Delhi).
Mr. S. U. KATANGALE, M.L.C.
Mr. NANDAGOALI.

The Central Provinces and Berar Depressed Classes Association :—

Mr. G. M. THAWARE.
Mr. J. G. SONONE.
Mr. S. G. NAIK.

41. The Chairman : This is a deputation, as the members of the Joint Conference will see, really representing the Depressed Classes. Gentlemen, we are glad to see you. Am I right in thinking that it is Mr. G. A. Gavai, a member of the Legislative Council, who is here ?—(Mr. Gavai) Yes.

42. Are you the general secretary, Mr. Gavai ?—Yes, sir.

43. Of which body ?—Of the All-India Depressed Classes Association.

44. Then, Mr. Devidass Jatao comes from Delhi ?—(Mr. Jatao) Yes.

45. Mr. Katangale, you are a member of the Legislative Council here ?—(Mr. Katangale) Yes.

46. One of the four nominated members ?—Yes.

47. Is there also a Central Provinces and Berar Depressed Classes Association ?—(Mr. Gavai) Yes.

48. And they have got representatives here ?—Yes.

49. We should be glad to hear shortly from you what you would like to say. I will just remind you that apart from having a very important Memorandum from the All-India Depressed Classes Association, which we have all of us studied, we have also got a great many other documents about you ; and, as I make out, in this province the two chief depressed castes are the Mahars and Chamars. The Mahars are about 882,000 and the Chamars 1,171,000. And according to the census we get a total of very nearly 3,000,000 out of a total population of 16,000,000. So this is a very important case indeed. Then I gather from the Government Book that has been supplied to us that if you take an ordinary typical district hardly any of the Mahars at present are qualified to vote in the general constituencies ?—It is so.

50. I do not think there is any Mahar in the Council at present ?—Elected ?

51. Yes ?—No.

52. There has been a Chamar ?—Yes, he was sent in by the Extremist Party.

53. In the first Council, I think ?—Yes.

54. In the first Council there was a tendency for people to stay away and put other people in ?—Yes.

55. You have a Chamar nominated to the present Council ?—Yes.

56. Now what is it you gentlemen would like to tell us ?—We want, sir, a separate electorate and a lowering of the franchise. We want a separate electorate for the Depressed Classes and communal representation in the Services, and also a member of the Cabinet.

57. Take the first point. You say you would like to have a separate electorate. What is your idea of the qualification for an elector ?—We have suggested in our Memorandum that a man getting an income by labour of Rs96 should be entitled to vote.

58. And how is it to be ascertained, whether he gets that income or not ?—That can be ascertained from the wages they get.

59. What percentage of these people do you think can read and write ? You are proposing a separate electorate. I want to know how far that separate electorate would be illiterate and how far it would consist of people who can read and write.—Most of the members to be elected would be literate, but the voters mostly would be illiterate. There is a very small percentage among the Depressed Classes who are literate.

60. To what extent do you think at present, Mr. Gavai, that members of the Depressed Classes in this province are voters in ordinary constituencies ?—They are not even one per cent. There are very few. I do not think in the whole of the Central Provinces and Berar there are one per cent. of the population who are entitled to vote for members of the Legislative Council.

61. The Depressed Classes supply a good deal of the industrial labour ?—In villages they are agricultural labourers.

62. But, apart from agriculture, they also supply a good deal of the industrial labour. Let us take the great mills in the province. Do you tell me that a Depressed Class man working in a mill never gets the qualification for the ordinary vote ?—Yes, sir, according to the present system of qualification.

63. We were told as a matter of fact yesterday, when we heard some evidence, that there were some having such a qualification.—That is in urban areas.

64. I did not ask you to exclude the urban areas from your answer. I asked you of the industrial worker. Let me put my question again. Is it not a fact that the Depressed Classes supply a good deal of the industrial workers ?—Yes.

65. In the mills and factories ?—Yes.

66. And do you tell me that no Depressed Class persons who are employed in industrial work in mills and factories have the qualification for a vote ?—So far as the Central Provinces are concerned the Municipal Act is very liberal here and there is a considerable number of voters from the Depressed Classes.

67. I do not quite follow it. Do you believe that there would be in a place like Nagpur a number of Depressed Class persons who, as a matter of fact, would be qualified to vote in a general constituency ?—Yes, but they will not return their men as the number of voters is very small.

68. Are they qualified to vote ?—In Nagpur there are men so qualified.

69. You want to have them separated off from everybody else, and you suggest that they should then form a separate electorate ?—Yes.

70. Would you prohibit a Depressed Class man who improved his position from being a voter in a general constituency ?—Yes, he will not achieve much.

The Chairman : I see your ideas. I am much obliged to you.

71. Rao Bahadur Rajah : Mr. Gavai, you just now said that you want a separate electorate for the Depressed Classes ?—Yes.

72. Supposing a separate electorate is formed for the Depressed Classes, if a member of the Depressed Classes has got a vote in the general constituency would you allow him to vote there or in the separate constituency ?—I will allow him to vote in the separate constituency.

73. If he wants to vote in the general constituency will you have any objection ?—Yes.

74. You will not allow him to exercise his vote both in the general constituency and in the separate constituency ?—That is impossible, I think.

75. What do you mean by "Depressed Classes ?"—The classes who are considered as untouchables.

76. I want to know whether the term "Depressed Classes" is constituted of certain communities or castes ?—They are a group of castes put in a similar degraded position.

77. And who are denied all social, political and economic rights ?—Yes.

78. You say that in a general electorate this community has no chance of having its representatives elected ?—That is so.

79. You want representation in proportion to the population ?—Yes.

80. Do you also advocate separate electorates for the Legislative Assembly ?—Yes. Such representatives should be chosen on the recommendation of the All-India Depressed Classes Association.

81. You want the All-India Depressed Classes Association to recommend names to the Government for nomination ?—Yes.

82. And what is the proportion you would demand in the Legislative Assembly ?—According to the numerical strength.

83. On the population basis there also ?—Yes.

84. Are you against the Indianisation of the Services ?—Dead against.

85. Why ?—We are treated much better at the hands of foreigners than at the hands of our so-called brethren.

86. Supposing you are given your adequate share in the Public Services would you then also refuse to have Indianisation in the Services ?—Yes.

87. The Depressed Classes are now labouring under some social disabilities, and how can you expect this Commission or the Government to help you in this ?—So far as justice is concerned they can help us. For instance in the matter of using public wells the Commission can recommend to enforce the law. So far as the law is concerned it is all right.

88. What I mean is this, whether these social disabilities have got a political background ?—Yes.

89. And whether these social problems influence political problems in India ?—Yes.

90. Am I to understand that the social disabilities should be removed before political power is given to Indians ?—Yes.

91. And if these social disabilities are not removed and political power is given to Indians they will perpetuate these social disabilities ?—Yes.

92. So in order to get rid of these social disabilities you want political power to be given to the Depressed Classes also ?—Yes.

93. And for that you want a separate electorate, adequate representation in proportion to the population and representation in the Services and in the Cabinet ?—Yes.

Memorandum submitted by the President, Central Provinces and Berar Non-Brahmin Political Association.

On behalf of the Central Provinces and Berar Non-Brahmin Political Association I have the honour to submit the Memorandum attached herewith for your consideration. This Memorandum has been prepared as a result of joint deliberation by members of the Select Committee appointed by the Central Provinces and Berar Non-Brahmin Political Conference held at Karodi in the Akola district on 8th of April, 1928, and which was attended by over 5,000 members. The Memorandum represents the unanimous opinion of the members of the Select Committee.

2. The Non-Brahmin Party. A brief explanation of the aims and objects of this party and its composition will be helpful in understanding the real political situation in the southern half of the country. Conditions of the northern half of the country are different, and most of the views represented in this Memorandum apply in particular to the Nagpur and Berar Divisions of the Central Provinces and the whole of Bombay and Madras Presidencies, excepting the Province of Sind.

The Non-Brahmin Party consists mainly of the masses who are exploited by the classes. The Non-Brahmin masses are mainly agriculturists and labourers and are the producers of the wealth of the country, and are mostly residents of the rural areas. These masses have for generations been neglected and subjected to a ruthless process of exploitation by the political class. These masses are backward in education and have not till recently taken any appreciable part in politics. Politics has, until the advent of the Non-Brahmin Party and the Depressed Classes into the political field, been a game of the political class mostly living in the urban areas, and whose occupation is mainly that of lawyers and Government servants. This class is the Brahmin. All political organisations—excepting those of the

Non-Brahmins, Depressed Classes and Muhammadans—are Brahmin-ridden organisations, and are merely run for strengthening the grip of the Brahmins over the masses and for getting hold of more power from the British. Their ultimate aim is a Brahmin Raj. Their population is under 5 per cent. of the total population and they monopolise between themselves 80 per cent. of the Public Services and hold a good many of the highest appointments in the gift of the Crown. The so-called Indianisation of the Services, which has proceeded too rapidly within recent years, has really resulted in Brahminisation of the Services. In other words, all the powers transferred to Indians and in the name of Indians have been in effect transferred to this one small section, viz., the Brahmins. This has resulted in strengthening the position of the exploiters and weakening that of the exploited masses. The so-called Indianisation has thus been a curse so far as the masses are concerned. There is absolutely no community of interest between the Brahmin who holds all the great majority of offices of power, patronage and profit and the Non-Brahmin masses. The political organisations other than the three specified above are merely Brahmin organisations run for their benefit and are in no sense representative of the interest or opinion of the masses.

The Brahmin class being politically and educationally far advanced has succeeded in dominating all local bodies and councils, and is also almost entirely in possession of the press and has systematically used its position to benefit itself to the exclusion of others. To give only one instance, an analysis of the Budget of the Central Provinces Government will show that almost all the revenues are contributed by the Non-Brahmin masses, and a very large share of the money, in one shape or the other, is spent for the benefit of the urban Brahmins, and little or nothing is spent for those who contribute the revenues. Little or nothing is spent on rural education, sanitation, medical relief, communications and agriculture, the mainstay of the country. The Constitution should provide for earmarking substantial funds for rural amelioration.

The Brahmins are very fond of describing themselves as Nationalists and Patriots. But in actual practice they are intensely and selfishly communal. The Non-Brahmin Party, as the name implies, includes all except the Brahmins. Its membership is open to all Hindus, Muhammadans, Christians, Jains, Parsees and everyone else except the Brahmins. The real interest of the Brahmins is directly opposed to the interest of the rest who form the Non-Brahmin Party. This Party stands for the communal representation in Public Services, Legislatures and Local Bodies. As long as the caste system remains it is idle to talk of a nation and the existence of different communities must be recognised as a fact, and these communities cannot be satisfied until their share of power, patronage and profit is assured to them. And hence the need for communal representation and communal electorates. The Brahmin-ridden organisations on the other hand are opposed to communal representation as thereby they stand to lose the advantage they have gained in the past.

It is the Brahmin who is responsible for dividing the Hindu society into innumerable castes, at the top of which he has placed himself and has attached to this caste system religious sanction which appeals very strongly to the sentiments of the illiterate masses. The real motive behind it is political and it is based on the principle of " Divide and Rule." The emoluments which he has attached to his exalted religious position bring him a great deal more than the revenues of the Government of India, and he is determined with all the forces at his command to perpetuate this caste system. His cry of Nationalism and Patriotism is all sham. Whatever may be the objects of the Hindu Mahasabha as originally started, in the southern part of the country, in actual working it has created greater tension between the Hindus and Muhammadans and tended to strengthen the grip of the Hindu caste system with all its implications. This organisation appears to be a purely religious organisation. It is noteworthy that it has been running candidates for seats on the Legislative Councils and the Assembly, and its leaders have declared that one of its objects is to fight the principle of communal representation and to create a new bond of alliance between communities that are opposed to communal representation in the political field. The Non-Brahmin Party has thus come into existence for protecting itself against the social and political exploitation by the Brahmins. The Brahmin and Non-Brahmin issue in these provinces is as real as the one between the Hindus and the Muhammadans in the northern half of the country. The social organisation known as the Satya Shodhak Samaj, which has been working in the Bombay Presidency, Berars and Nagpur Division for the last fifty years has greatly changed people's ideas regarding the caste system. It stands for removal of caste barriers and all vicious and ruinous customs in Hindu society and it naturally comes into conflict with the Brahmin interest, and every effort is made by the Brahmins to misrepresent it and even to crush it. The awakening among the masses as a result of this movement has been very great and the masses are prepared to support beneficent social legislation. But as long as the franchise is confined to a few people with property qualifications there will be no chance for the masses to help themselves against ruinous social customs. In the circumstances of this part of the country, therefore, a considerable widening of the franchise is a necessity. The right of communal representation in the Services, right of temple entry for the Depressed Classes, and the free use of all places of public resort should be embodied in the Constitution.

3. The Select Committee has nominated the following persons to appear before the Royal Commission to give evidence :—

(1) Rai Bahadur K. S. Nayudu, B.A., LL.B., President, Central Provinces and Berar Non-Brahmin Association, Wardha.
(2) Mr. N. G. Amritkar, B.A., LL.B., Pleader, Morsi, District Amraoti.
(3) Mr. Pandharinath Sitaram Patel, Secretary, Non-Brahmin Association, Ghikhli, District Buldana.
(4) Anand Swami, President, Non-Brahmin Association, Ghikhli, District Buldana.
(5) M. G. A. Gavai, M.L.C., Mahal Tekdi Road, Amraoti.

Memorandum of the Central Provinces and Berar Non-Brahmin Political Association, adopted by the Select Committee appointed by the Provincial Conference held on the 8th of April, 1928, for submission to the Indian Statutory Commission, in reply to the Questionnaire issued by it.

1. (a) Every adult having an income of Rs120/- per year should have a right to vote for the Legislative Councils and Local Boards and Municipalities.

(b) Elections should be by direct voting and by ballot in all bodies.

(c) To safeguard the interests of different communities there should be communal representation in all bodies based on the following communal electorates :—

(1) Brahmins.
(2) Muhammadans.
(3) Depressed Classes.
(4) Non-Brahmins.

Explanation. Muhammadans and Depressed Classes really form part of the Non-Brahmin political group. But for some time to come their separate representation seems necessary.

The number of representatives of each community in all bodies should be proportionate to the population of each community.

Economic interests may continue to be represented as at present.

The University seat should be abolished.

No voter should be required to travel more than two miles to record his vote.

At present there is no community of interest between the electors and their representatives in the Council. In fact, their interests are opposed to each other.

Such parties as exist in the Councils are merely nominal. Real representation and real parties can under the existing Indian conditions emerge only out of communal electorates.

Nominations of officials is necessary. Nominations of non-officials to represent important minorities is also necessary. But in no case should fictitious nominations be made, such as that of a Brahmin lawyer aspiring to the post of a sub-Judge representing factory labour.

8. (d) Social progress in British India. The caste system in India is thoroughly inconsistent with ideas of democracy. Several vicious social customs exist which are utterly detrimental to the healthy growth of the Hindu community. The Brahmins are responsible for the existence and perpetuation of these customs. Several efforts at beneficent social legislation against most degrading and shocking customs have in the past been stoutly opposed by Brahmin legislators. The real implications of the caste system and its degenerating effects have not been fully realised, and attempts at social advancement have not met with the sympathy and support they deserve.

10 (c) and 7. There should be proportionate representation of all communities in Public Services. At present these Services are the monopoly of the Brahmins, who are exploiting the masses and have been using their official positions to retain their grip over the masses.

(e) In recent years there has been considerable Indianisation of higher Services. In actual effect it has resulted in Brahminisation of Services and the weakening of European element and lowering the efficiency of the administrative machinery. In practice it has been found that a Brahmin official is a Brahmin politician first and an official next. The non-Brahmins want the Services to be held by themselves in proportion to their numbers. At present they are too weak to resist the combined efforts of the Brahmin officials and non-officials to keep them down, and for some time to come they consider it necessary to retain a strong British element in the Services to protect them until they secure sufficient power in their hands to protect themselves. This British element should consist of experienced officers of the right type.

11. At present most of the money spent on education by the Provincial Government is spent in urban areas where only 10 per cent. of the population lives, and most of this money benefits the Brahmins.

Most of the rural population consisting of 90 per cent. is illiterate for want of schools in rural areas. The real need of the province is to divert funds from higher education to primary rural education and rural reconstruction.

Memorandum submitted by the Non-Brahmin Party, Central Provinces and Berar.

1. (a) The constitution of the Provincial Government should be one Governor with an Executive Council of four members—one British and three Indians—representing all Interests and all Communities, responsible to Parliament for the next ten years, and responsibility to electorate to be gradually evolved by establishing healthy constitutional conventions. Tenure of office of the Executive Councillors to be five years.

(b) The Governor and the Governor-General should have the power of vetoing or certifying all legislation.

2. (a) The membership of the Legislative Council C.P. and Berar should be raised so as to provide for one rural seat for each Tahsil, and Maharastra Brahmins should not be eligible for standing for rural constituencies.

(b) Every adult having an income of Rs120/- per year should have a right to vote for the Legislative Council and Local Bodies.

(c) There should be communal representation in Legislative Councils and Local Bodies based on the following electorates :—

(1) Brahmins,
(2) Muhammadans,
(3) Depressed Classes,
(4) All the rest.

(d) The number of representatives of the aforesaid four communities should be proportionate to their respective populations.

(e) Economic interests may continue to be represented as at present.

(f) University seat should be abolished.

(g) Nomination of officials is necessary to make expert advice available.

(h) Nomination of non-officials to represent important minorities is also necessary.

(i) No Maharastra Brahmins should be nominated on any of the bodies.

(j) No voter should be required to travel more than a reasonable fixed distance to record his vote.

(k) President of the Legislative Council should, for a period of 10 years, be a non-official, nominated by the Governor. Tenure of office of the President to be five years.

3. The following provisions should be made in the Constitution :—

(1) Earmarking of certain proportion of the revenues for expenditure on rural education, sanitation, medical relief, communications and agriculture.

(2) Proportionate communal representation in the Public Services of the country.

(3) Right of entry in the Hindu temples and the free use of all places of public resort for the Depressed Classes.

(4) A minimum number of appointments in all branches of Public Service to be held by Europeans should be fixed so as to ensure a sufficiently strong British element in the Services.

(5) Income-tax should be provincialised and all provincial contributions to Government of India should be abolished.

Inhabitants of the country. The Brahmins are mild and courteous in their manners, particularly in the presence of superiors; but in their intercourse with other classes they are often proud and overbearing. They are great flatterers and dissemblers, and have a complete command over their tempers, which they never lose where their interests are at stake. They are quick, penetrating, and can express themselves with readiness and propriety on all occasions.

The manners of the peasantry and lower classes, both of the city and country, though rougher than those of the Brahmins, are more pleasing to Europeans. The most remarkable feature, perhaps, in the character of the Mahrattas of all descriptions, is the little regard they pay to show or ceremony in the common intercourse of life. A peasant or mechanic of the lowest order, appearing before his superiors, will sit down of his own accord, tell his story without ceremony, and converse more like an equal than an inferior; and if he has a petition to present, he talks in a loud and boisterous tone, and fearlessly sets forth his claims. Both the peasantry and the better classes are often coarse and indelicate in their language and many of the proverbs which they are fond of introducing into conversation are extremely gross. In general, the Mahrattas, and particularly the cultivators, are not possessed of much activity or energy of character, but they have a quick perception of their own interest, though their ignorance of writing and accounts often renders them the dupes of the artful Brahmins.

State of the moral character. The morals of the Brahmins are described, both by Captain Williamson and Captain Gordon, to be very depraved. In all their dealings with the Government they show a total disregard to truth and common honesty, and they are found to be a deceitful, intriguing, and unprincipled race. They are not naturally cruel, but to gratify their avarice, they do not scruple to employ torture and the most cruel punishments. They are considered to be bad masters. Their charity only extends to their own tribe. They unblushingly condemn anything like honest or upright conduct, and deceit is regarded by them as the perfection of wisdom. There are, no doubt, many respectable individuals amongst them, but so sensible are they of the venality of their own order, that if they recommend one of their own relations, even for employment under Government, they either force him to give security, or hire a person to watch his proceedings. Their vices are in part redeemed by some virtues. The Brahmins are quiet, sober and intelligent; they are fond of their children and kind to their women.

COMMISSIONER'S REVIEW ON THE CHANDA DISTRICT SETTLEMENT REPORT.

Para 5, Brahmins.—Major Lucie Smith quotes from reports written forty years ago passages regarding the Brahmins of the Nagpore country, and he fully endorses Sir R. Jenkins' opinion of their character, and their influence upon the district. It seems as if the Mahrattas and Koonbees had held their own against the Brahmins in the Nagpur and Wurdah districts where the personal influence of the Bhonslah kings was felt. But for the last forty years the Brahmins seem to have worked their will among the alien Gond and Teloogoo races in Chanda. In Chanda, if anywhere, Professor Max Muller's theory holds good—that "Brahminical influence pervaded the whole community, not as a vivifying influence but as a deadly poison." I am glad, however, to be able to think that the Nagpore and Chanda Brahmins are not all bad. Many of them do their duty and business well in many walks of life. We cannot expect that the Brahmins will, within any definite time, cease to be the leaders of Hindu society. But we may hope that the example of the Mahratta Brahmins of the Konkan, who are now so largely employed in this part of the Deccan, will spur on the rising generation of Nagpore Brahmins to educate themselves and to think for themselves. Brahmans mainly congregate in towns where there are good Government schools, so that they can qualify themselves to become leaders instead of obstructors of Chanda progress.

CHANDA SETTLEMENT REPORT.

CHAPTER I.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION.

Para 151, Brahmins 6,510.—The Brahmins, though numbering only 6,510, are a very important class, and during the time of the Mahrattas their influence was paramount; indeed those days are known among the people as the "Brahmin raj." As a race the Brahmins possess marked ability and industry, and have courteous manners, with a great talent of ingratiating themselves with those they wish to please, but they are regardless of truth, unscrupulous and intriguing, overbearing to their inferiors, avaricious in money matters and dissolute in morals, grasping landlords and hard creditors, and reach their worst type in the Nagpore Brahmin, whose greed in days gone by entailed unnumbered evils upon the Chanda people. There are of course many individuals to whom this description does not apply, and who are valued members of the upper class, but these form the exception; and to show that this sketch of their general character is not too highly coloured I would extract the picture drawn of them in 1826 by Sir R. Jenkins. (Vide Appendix No. 1.)

Three-fourths of the total number in the district are Mahratta Brahmins, who are chiefly landowners, moneylenders, shopkeepers, priests, Government officials, and private servants where clerical work is required. The Teloogoo Brahmins are the most learned of the body, and have some excellent Sanscrit scholars among them, while the Hindoostanee Brahmins have originally come south to obtain Government employment. The Goojrathi Brahmins, on the other hand, are bankers and landowners, and belong mainly to the influential families.

APPENDIX NO. 3.

REPORT ON LAND REVENUE SETTLEMENT OF THE NAGPUR DISTRICT 1899, BY SIR R. H. CRADDOCK, OFFICIATING COMMISSIONER OF SETTLEMENTS.

Mahratta Brahmans	.. 14505	.. 16009
Hindustani Brahmans	.. 5080	.. 6645

Para 52.—The Brahmins may in one sense claim to be discussed along with agriculturists. They comprise the largest landowners, and hold besides a great deal of land in tenant right, or as small plot-proprietors. The Hindustani Brahmins, who are in a large minority, are engaged in shopkeeping, moneylending, and service, but when they hold land they do more in the personal supervision of their agriculture than the Mahratta Brahmins, who are for the most part non-resident.

But it is the Mahratta Brahmins of whom most is seen in Nagpur. They almost monopolise the appointments in Government service, at least all the better class of appointments. An outsider in an office largely manned by Mahratta Brahmins stands a very small chance of success; every slip he makes is at once brought to light, while the faults of members of their own community are carefully glossed over. Excellent judges of character themselves, they are past-masters in concealing their own thoughts.

Sir R. Jenkins, in a passage often quoted (but which I will not reproduce as being too dark a picture at the present day), recorded a very unfavourable opinion of the Brahmins. The Brahmins of the Court entourage doubtless justified the character for intrigue and contempt for truth which he gave them. Since his day, however, Western education has raised the standard of honesty, and many upright men are now to be found among the educated members of the caste.

As traders, moneylenders, and lawyers the Brahmins are most successful, as landlords they fall far below the ideal standard. As clerks and officials they are second to none. The barrier of exclusiveness is breaking down; their clannishness shows some signs of diminution, they are losing alike their tendency to flattery and, it must be confessed, some of the courtesy for which they were so distinguished. This change in their characteristics is partly due to the spread of education, and partly to new blood received, soon after the formation of the Provinces, from Poona, Satars, and Ratnagiri, from which places many of our higher officials originally came.

Their abhorrence of practical and mechanical work is also beginning to give way. The superintendent of the Government Farm at Nagpur is thoroughly practical, as well as a scientific agriculturist, and the son of an Extra-Assistant Commissioner, after working as an apprentice in the railway workshops, has now set up a large workshop of his own. Progress may be slow, but as the avenues to Government employment become more crowded with applicants, as the legal profession becomes more and more competitive, as the religious veneration in which the Brahmins are held weakens, which it is already perceptibly doing, they will be wise enough to turn their attention to more technical professions, and will attain as much success as practical workers as they have gained in the past as writers and officials.

Deputation from the Central Provinces and Berar Non-Brahmin Political Association.

The deputation consisted of :—

Rai Bahadur K. S. NAIDU, President (Spokesman).
Mr. N. G. AMRITKAR, B.A., LL.B., Secretary.
Mr. G. A. GAVAI, M.L.C.

94. The Chairman : This is a deputation, is it not, from the Central Provinces and Berar Non-Brahmin Political Association ?—(Rai Bahadur Naidu) Yes.

95. We have your Memorandum, gentlemen. * * * Rai Bahadur K. S. Naidu, you are the president of the Association and spokesman ?—Yes.

96. I wish you to tell me first of all when was this Non-Brahmin Political Association founded—how long ago ?—Before I begin, may I let you have, sir, a copy of a brief statement of the case of the Non-Brahmin Party ?

97. The Chairman : Does it differ materially from your Memorandum ?—No, sir; it is in fact a brief statement of our case. (Copy of the statement handed over to the Chairman).

98. I would like to take your own course in addressing us shortly, but would you tell us when this body was established ?—The Non-Brahmin Political Party really came into existence about six or seven years ago. This is a natural evolution of the Non-Brahmin social movement that was started in this province about fifty years ago. That social movement is known as the Satya Shodhak movement. That came into existence for purposes of destroying these caste barriers among the Hindu communities and consolidating them into one community. The natural development of that has been that about six or seven years ago we started the Non-Brahmin movement also.

99. I do not quite follow. You say that the object of this Association is to destroy the caste barriers ?—It was only a social movement to begin with, and five or six years ago we included among our activities the political side as well.

100. I have got the impression from reading through a document that one of the rules of your Association was that no Brahmin should belong to it ?—Yes, sir. The reason for that is that the Brahmin community here has been in the social as well as in the political field systematically exploiting the Non-Brahmin communities. There is no community of interest between these two communities, and therefore it was not found possible to include that one community in our group.

101. Of course, we know this kind of division. For instance in Madras it is very well known and has had very important political effects, and to some extent in other provinces too. Would you include in your body people who are not Hindus ?—Not in the social one, but in the political one we do.

102. Have you in fact got any such members ?—Yes, we have got Muhammadans; we have got Depressed Classes.

103. Depressed Classes may or may not be regarded as Hindus; but you have Muhammadans ?—Yes, there are Muhammadans.

104. What is your membership altogether ?—We have a very large membership; I could not exactly tell you how many. Practically half the non-Brahmins of Berar and the Nagpur division really belong to us.

105. There is the secretary of this Association who will be able to tell us its membership ?—(Mr. Amritkar) The total membership might amount to, say, about a thousand.

106. Sardar Shivdev Singh Uberoi : Are they all subscribing members ?—Yes.

107. The Chairman : Anyhow it is a large and representative body. Just tell us then, would you, what you would like to represent to us. We shall be very glad to hear you ?—(Rai Bahadur Naidu) The position in our province is one of great handicap in the matter of progress of the non-Brahmin people. We really want all that handicap to be removed; we want a fair chance to progress. At present I may tell you, sir, that the circumstances of this province differ materially from the circumstances obtaining in various other provinces. In this province we have got the meeting-ground of all communities and all castes from all parts of India. Of these several communities that have come here, there is one community, the Maharashtra Brahmin, which has really captured all political power in the place, and the result is that we have to advance against that community in our social as well as our political activities, and these activities are naturally hampered by the obstruction placed in our way by this one community. You will find, sir, that all the points set out in this brief statement practically refer to that aspect of the case. So in the legislative councils, for instance, we have asked for the electorate to be considerably enlarged.

108. You say in paragraph 1 (a) of the statement put into my hands just now by you: "The constitution of the Provincial Government should be one "Governor with an executive council of four members "—one British and three Indians—representing all "interests and all communities responsible to "Parliament for the next ten years . . ." What do you mean by "responsible to Parliament"?—That means, just now the ministers are responsible to the electorate. When the subjects are reserved for ten years, which is our proposal, they will exactly be in the same position as the executive councillors are now.

109. Then you are proposing now a Constitution for the next stage in which there will be no member in the Governor's Cabinet responsible to the Legislature?—That is what I am proposing.

110. Then we come to the next recommendation, (2). You say: "The membership of the Legislative "Council, Central Provinces and Berar should be "raised so as to provide for one rural seat for each "tahsil and Mahrashtra Brahmins should not be "eligible for standing for rural constituencies." You pick out the Mahrashtra Brahmins, sometimes called the Mahratta Brahmins, and you say they should be disqualified?—Yes, sir.

111. Then no Brahmin should be a rural member; is that not so?—No Brahmin ought to be a rural member, sir.

112. You told me, when we started, that the guiding principle of your organisation as first conceived was to break down caste?—Yes.

113. It strikes one rather as an emphatic assertion?—We must go through a period during which we have to be struggling against this caste system and it is not a very easy thing to be destroyed. There are forces which are counteracting to perpetuate that. Already there are the Hindu Sabha activities and the Sanatana Sabha activities. All these are determined to perpetuate the caste system. So, as against our activities there are counter activities to contend with. In the meantime we have got to evolve some formula by which to go.

114. Then you say in 2 (c): "There should be "communal representation in Legislative Councils "and Local Bodies based on the following electorates." Then, according to you, you may have a Brahmin in the Local Body, but you have said that you do not want a Brahmin in the Legislative Council from rural constituencies?—I should also have him, sir, in the Legislative Council.

115. I thought you said in 2 (a) that there should be no Mahrashtra Brahmin standing for rural constituencies?—That has not been very accurately stated there. What we really mean is that the Mahrashtra Brahmins at present living in the urban areas are eligible for standing for rural constituencies and thus a very large number of them get returned to the Council. They really do not represent the rural interests, but yet they come in very large numbers.

116. But I understand your proposal is that no man should be a candidate for a particular seat unless he resides in that constituency. Is that what you mean?—Yes, that is right in one sense. Just now the Mahrashtra Brahmins are eligible for standing for rural constituencies because some of them live in those constituencies, and some of them get elected because residence in and also qualification for urban areas also qualify them for rural constituencies.

117. Is what you mean this: You want to establish a principle that the only persons who could be elected for a constituency should be people who reside in it?—Yes.

118. Does that apply also to other people besides the Brahmins?—Yes.

119. I think I appreciate what is meant here. Then we go on to 2 (c). You have to elect members to Local Bodies from (1) Brahmins, (2) Muhammadans (3) Depressed Classes, and (4) all the rest. My friend, Mr. Hartshorn, points out to me that out of the 55 elected members now in the Legislative Council all except 8 reside in urban areas?—Yes.

120. That I gather is the sort of point you make, country people to represent country people?—Yes.

121. Then I see you propose to abolish the University seat. You do not give the reason here; just tell me what your reason is?—My reason is this: In the first place it is not a residential university. In the second place all graduates are entitled to vote for this constituency, and the number of graduates in this province consists of a very large proportion of Mahrashtra Brahmins. I have not actually calculated the figures, but my belief is that about 90 per cent. of the graduates are Mahratta Brahmins. They are sub-judges and pleaders living all over the province.

122. You say that 90 per cent. of the graduates are Brahmins, or is it that 90 per cent. of the Mahrashtra Brahmins are graduates?—90 per cent. of the graduates who have votes are Mahratta Brahmins. The result of this is that every time it is only that community that can get returned, and in effect this is a reservation of a seat for a Mahratta Brahmin which is the most powerful community here. No other community stands the remotest chance of getting elected from this constituency for another hundred years if the constituency continues as it is.

123. That is the reason for proposing to abolish the seat, I see?—It turns out to be an indirect reservation for the most powerful community.

124. Then you propose to continue nomination of officials to make expert advice available. I suppose that is because you feel there are cases where you must have a man to give expert and skilled advice?—Yes.

125. Then further down you say that no Maharashtra Brahmin should be nominated?—My reasons are that nominations have to be provided for in the case of the weaker communities——

126. Forgive me. You say in 2 (g) that nomination of officials is necessary to make expert advice available. That has nothing to do with communities. And do you propose to make a rule that however expert a Brahmin may be, and however expert the advice he may be able to give, no Brahmin must ever be nominated as an official?—No, sir. I should like to add the word "non-official" after the words "Mahrashtra Brahmins" in paragraph 2 (i).

127. At the present moment who is the man nominated to represent labour in the Legislative Council?—He is a Brahmin pleader who is now practising here, and who is an aspirant for the post of a sub-judge.

128. My experience in India has not been that the Brahmins are the only persons who want posts; not at all. But you take the view that there ought to be a law that nobody who is a Brahmin could be nominated as a non-official?—The principle behind it is this, sir: Nomination is to help people to come in who have no opportunity of coming in through election, and to allow the strongest group to come in by nomination is against that principle.

129. You take the view that as things are the Brahmin caste does in fact get a wholly disproportionate amount of influence and power, and you think that steps must be taken to prevent that from spreading and these are the steps which you suggest might be considered?—Yes, I have got the figures for the second Council. Out of 70 members they were 22, though they are only about 2 per cent. of the population of the province; in the present Council they are 14.

130. Kindly look at paragraph 3 of your Memorandum which deals with the provisions that should be made in the Constitution. There is one which is marked No. (3): "Right of entry in the Hindu temples . . . for members of the Depressed "Classes." Do you suggest that the British Parliament should legislate that?—Certainly. Our point of view is this. These social caste divisions have got a political background. The Brahmins have introduced these to divide up the communities into various communities in order to keep a hold on them. It is a deliberate intention to call it social and thus to exclude it from the political sphere.

131. Let me explain the view which lends itself to me. I should certainly call the difficulty a social one, because it does arise in the course of the social relations of the people. The fact that one man, for example, is not willing to receive food from the hands of another is manifestly a social difficulty, is it not?—That is exactly what we are contending against.

132. It is not really a question whether you are contending against it or not. The fact is that it is a social difficulty. The question is what can be done to produce a more sympathetic state of things. I think myself that while undoubtedly it is most important to secure adequate political representation and to promote every political change which tends to break down these things, it is important at the same time to remember that social ostracism is a thing that cannot be put a stop to by an Act of Parliament?—We have got to take a step forward. I quite follow your point of view about it, but I think that these backward and depressed and oppressed classes, who are suffering under a good many unjust social customs, should be helped by legislation.

133. You see the way they can be helped does not necessarily lie along the route of making certain that they have got adequate representation and a right to argue for fair treatment?—Adequate representation is the best method which will bring out the required result.

134. The Chairman: Do you not feel, Mr. Rajah, that there is something in what I have been trying to get at from the deputation. It is very important to pursue all possible ways by which you may contribute to the breakdown of this state of things which I deplore as much as anybody else. But I want to face the difficulties. It seems to me that political evils can, of course, be remedied by political remedies; the right of the community to express itself and to call attention to its grievances can be secured by adequate representation, but I do feel great difficulty in a proposal, for example, that the right of entry in the Hindu temples should be laid down in a constitutional statute.

Rao Bahadur Rajah: We ask for the other thing, sir, viz., "the free use of all places of public resort."

The Chairman: That is another matter.

The Witness (Rai Bahadur Naidu): If you say that the State should not interfere with social customs there will be practical difficulties in the way of our communities securing their rights. One instance that I can point to happened in 1927. There was a Hindu Maha Sabha here. In that Sabha some Non-Brahmins pressed forward and succeeded in getting a resolution passed that the temples should be thrown open to the Depressed Classes. As a result of that one Depressed Class boy who thought that that was a great achievement (and he was very pleased with that) went to enter the Ambamayi temple in Amraoti. He was soon spotted out and prosecuted and finally convicted by a Brahmin judge and sentenced to one month's imprisonment. He did not go to the temple to create any mischief, but out of pure devotion to the deity.

135. Rao Bahadur Rajah: Did he go alone?—Yes.

136. Sardar Shivdev Singh Uberoi: What was the offence committed?

The Chairman: I should think that there is probably some offence which is described as outraging the religious sentiment.

The Witness (Rai Bahadur Naidu): In this case he was charged with criminal trespass. The idea at the back of it was that the Brahmin was in possession of the temple and everybody else could be excluded by him at will.

137. The Chairman: I am told that on appeal the conviction was quashed?—Yes; it was an English judge that acquitted him.

138. I think that a great many of the people who look from outside will sympathise unreservedly with the difficulty. But I frankly feel great doubts as to how far the constitutional statute can be expected to deal with this particular side of the problem?—If relieving people from slavery on any account can be the object of any constitution, I do not see why when there is public opinion to back it up it should not be backed by legislation. There is a large volume of opinion growing in favour of the Depressed Classes.

139. I am asking for practical help. Is it your deliberate view that the constitution passed by the British Parliament at Westminster should contain a provision that there should be a right of entry into the Hindu temples for everybody?—Yes, for every Hindu, as a matter of right.

140. Sir Sankaran Nair: Have you got any religious endowment boards here?—There are none, I am sorry to say.

141. Lord Strathcona: In your statement in No. 2 (d) you say: "The number of representatives "of the aforesaid four communities (that is to say, "Brahmins, Muhammadans, Depressed Classes, and "all the rest), should be proportionate to their "respective populations." Do you mean that the number of representatives in the Legislative Council and also in Local Bodies of those four communities should be proportionate to their populations?—Yes.

142. I have worked out the figures, basing my calculation on the present strength of the Council. That will give us Brahmins 2, Muhammadans 2, Depressed Classes 18, and all the rest, including officials and everybody else, 40. Take Muhammadans, for instance. Do you think it will be a fair representation of Muhammadans to have only two members in the Legislative Council?—The Muhammadans are a weaker community, and I think on that ground the representation in excess of the strict number would be justified.

143. Take the Depressed Classes. Can you find 18 men who are qualified to represent the Depressed Classes in the Council?—I think you can find so many.

144. Just one other question on your printed document. You say in paragraph 3, No. (4): "A minimum number of appointments in all branches "of Public Service to be held by Europeans should "be fixed so as to insure a sufficiently strong British "element in the Services." Do you mean that a minimum number of appointments should be fixed for all time?—Not for all time.

145. I asked that question because in your typed document you say "it is necessary to "retain a strong British element in the Services to "protect the non-Brahmins until they secure "sufficient power in their hands to protect themselves"?—It would come to that. I thought the question was what is to be provided just now. The constitution we are suggesting should be for a limited period. We must have protection so long as we have to fight with a most powerfully organised community.

146. Colonel Lane-Fox: About 1 (a) in your printed document. Do you find that in your view the province has been so exploited by Brahmins that you would rather go back and practically do away for the time being with all the Reforms, go back to the government with an Executive Council, not responsible in any sense to an elected body ?—Certainly. The downfall of the last Ministry in this province, for instance, was due to Brahmin intrigue, because there was no Brahmin in the Ministry.

147. The effect of the Reforms has been to set up an unfair domination of one particular caste ? —That is so.

148. Item (5) of the last paragraph : "Income-"tax should be provincialised and all provincial "contributions to the Government of India should "be abolished." Why do you propose that ? How are you going to provide the Central Government with funds, for instance, for defence ?—My only desire is to get more money for the province.

149. But you have to look to the practical disadvantages ?—I do not wish to press the point ; I will leave the matter to you to work out.

150. Mr. Cadogan : There is one sentence which I should like to be explained. It is in page 509 of your typed Memorandum. ". . . an analysis "of the budget of the Central Provinces Government "will show that almost all the revenues are contri-"buted by the non-Brahmin masses and a very "large share of the money, in one shape or the other, "is spent for the benefit of the urban Brahmins, and "little or nothing is spent for those who contribute "the revenues ? "—The Brahmins who are referred to are people who usually live in urban areas ; there are very few of them who live in rural areas. They are not in any sense the producers of the wealth of the country. But the non-Brahmins, who are usually agriculturists and labourers, live in rural areas, and they are the persons who are the producers of the wealth of the province. If you look at the budget you will see that practically all the revenue of 6 crores is contributed by the non-Brahmin masses, the agriculturists and the labourers, in the shape of land revenue, stamp revenue, forest revenue, and every other revenue. If you see the debit side of the budget you will find that little is spent on them ; there is just 20 lakhs provided under the head "Agriculture." If you further analyse it you will find that it is spent mostly on salaries. The situation therefore is that in rural areas you have not sufficient schools, you have no communications, and you have no medical relief. Because the Brahmin population is concentrated in urban areas it derives the greatest advantage.

151. The Chairman : I do not think you are quite right in your impression. I see that in 1928–29 out of 60 lakhs of new expenditure, 27 lakhs was spent on general indivisible services, and of the rest 9 lakhs was spent in urban areas while 24 lakhs was spent in rural areas ?—I am not personally acquainted with the details of the 24 lakhs.

152. What I feel is this : I no doubt sympathise with you. The rural areas are so spread out that the money spent on them may seem to be comparatively little when one sees the money spent in a particular place. But if you add together the money spent in all the rural areas it may turn out to be a larger sum than it appears at first sight ?—Even assuming that 24 lakhs is actually spent in the rural areas, what is it to the 6 crores that the rural areas contribute ?

The Chairman : I do not know.

153. Mr. Hartshorn : I see you suggest that the franchise should be extended to every adult whose income is Rs120 per annum. Can you tell us how many you think would be enfranchised on that qualification ? Would not that be equal to adult suffrage ?—Almost.

154. There would not be many from the adult population who are getting less than Rs10 per month ?—Practically none.

155. I see that the Depressed Classes want every adult with an annual income of Rs96 to be enfranchised. If that is conceded I suppose it would practically include everybody ?—Yes. At present only those who have the property qualification are enfranchised. Roughly speaking, for this purpose, you may divide them into two groups. One is the group of the Maharashtra Brahmins. Most of them possess property and they come in in very large numbers ; their number would be 20 per cent. of the electorate and they are able to cast their solid vote. The other group possessing property qualification is in the grip of the Brahmin lawyer, Brahmin landlord, Brahmin moneylender, Brahmin petty official, and it is very much influenced by the Brahmin. It is not easy for the people of this group to vote for the candidate of their own choice. Unless we get out of this and widen the franchise we will not get the right sort of men.

156. This would mean practically adult male franchise. I trust it will not include many women.—If we cannot go quite so far we will be quite content with the franchise as it is if it is considerably widened.

157. And if you had a franchise sufficiently widened on this basis you would like all election to be by ballot ?—Yes.

158. No nomination ?—No nomination.

159. Sir Arthur Froom : Your difficulty is with the Brahmin Party. You say the Brahmins secure the best representation, the best posts, and so on and so forth. Would you describe these difficulties as arising owing to difference in education between Brahmins and non-Brahmins ?—Yes, partly due to education and partly due to the history of how the Maratha Brahmins have captured the power. On pages 511–2 you will find certain extracts given by me. They give the opinions of some responsible British administrators from 1827 down to 1899, and these British officers have described the position as they found it, how the Maratha Brahmins by intrigue and by unscrupulous methods have managed to gain the position that they attained. They are educationally advanced too. Even then, with all their powers, they have not treated the non-Brahmin masses fairly. In the elections you find the Brahmin official is a nuisance. He exerts considerable influence in the districts in favour of the Brahmin candidate or a candidate that will support the Brahmin, and in that way he is a terrible handicap on the backward communities that wish to advance.

160. I have read all that, this Appendix to your printed document. But what I am not clear about is this. The Brahmins are numerically very few compared with the other classes of Hindus, let alone the Depressed Classes. Why can the rest of the non-Brahmin portion not fight their own battle ?—They have got all the engines of oppression, all the machine guns in their hands.

161. Education ?—Education and all Public Services.

162. The Chairman : All Public Services ?—I mean most of them.

163. Mr. Hartshorn : You said 80 per cent. ?—80 in the subordinate services and 24 in the gazetted appointments.

164. Sir Arthur Froom : Are there not many among the non-Brahmins who can stand up against the Brahmins ? You simply regard the Brahmins as having established themselves, and you cannot disestablish them without the assistance of some . . . —I can understand that if we are given a fair chance, but if there are handicaps, persecutions and use of official pressure, as there is in the matter of elections and everything else including appointments, our position is very weak indeed. Not only had they consolidated their position in the past, but they have done most consolidation work since the Reforms. That has been the result on the backward classes of the Reforms.

165. And you do not feel you can so organise yourselves as to meet this ?—Give us some machine guns. You have given them all to them.

166. Mr. Hartshorn : You mean the vote in itself is sufficient ?—The Brahmin uses his influence in the elections from the official downward, and every voter with property qualifications is under the grip of the Brahmin in some form or other, the Brahmin landlord, the Brahmin official, the Brahmin pleader and so on. They are using all their positions. We will get protection if you put in a proportionate representation of all communities. Then they would not go in for these elections and trouble everybody. We will be free from this nuisance then.

167. The Chairman : One phrase of yours was " the pleader." How is it that anybody is in the grip of the Brahmin pleader or any other sort of pleader ?—I will tell you an instance. I stood for the last election, and failed. Many people who supported me were people who go to Brahmin pleaders. In these places the proportion of Brahmin pleaders is something like 95 per cent. in every Bar. The briefs of those people supporting me were thrown away and their cases were badly dealt with. Of course, they had no alternative. They had to go to one pleader or other, and most of the choice was limited to Brahmins.

168. The Chairman : This is a very serious thing. I belong, or used to belong, to that honourable profession. I never heard that anybody in that honourable profession of the Bar failed to conduct cases properly because he was embittered with somebody.—I am sorry to say it does exist here.

169. The Chairman : If it does, it is perfectly monstrous and scandalous.—It does exist on a large scale.

170. Colonel Lane-Fox : The whole population is not engaged in litigation. Some of them will be free from that sort of influence.—I think very few.

171. The Chairman : From your point of view I think you will be glad if I mention what the figures are which are before me. These figures, prepared impartially and carefully, show how many of the posts in the provincial services are held by Brahmins out of the total. I am excluding the subordinate services and take the three main departments, executive, judicial and police. The figures stand thus : In the provincial executive service out of a total of 106 officers 36 are Brahmins. In the provincial judicial service out of a total of 138 officers 95 are Brahmins. And in the police out of a total of 19 officers 6 are Brahmins. I may add that in none of the three cases, the executive provincial service, the judicial provincial service and the police service is there any European at all, so that the figures are not affected by that.—This preponderance has become a nuisance here to the rest of the community.

172. Sardar Shivdev Singh Uberoi : May I ask whether the Brahmins as a class were given some preferential privileges in the constitution of the government of this province for them to become so powerful as to outshine all other communities. Is it by the constitution of the government of this province or by their own ability and intelligence that they have come to the forefront ?—I did not quite follow the question.

173. I am asking whether the Brahmins as a class were given some preferential privileges for them to advance so high and so much in comparison with other communities ?

The Chairman : You mean by the constitution itself ?

174. Sardar Shivdev Singh Uberoi : Yes.—Well, the natural result of these Brahmins holding a lot of these appointments, and being in a position to influence the further appointments, has a great deal to do with it. And secondly—I cannot say exactly how it works, whether it is a constitutional matter or not—one thing noticeable is in respect of the Reforms that we have got. We are going through a peculiar history. In this province there have been something like 10 Indian judges in the High Court appointed so far. Of these three were appointed before the Reforms. We find that during the Reforms period seven Indian judges have been appointed, and during that period we have had two Indian Home Members, Brahmin Home Members, and we find that out of the seven judges, six are Maratha Brahmins. How it turned out one cannot say. It is too much for me to know the secret.

175. The Chairman : I think the answer to the Sardar's question is plainly this. There is no provision in the constitution which gives any preference. However the present situation may have come about, it is not due to any provision in the constitution.—In one sense it would be the result of this, that the constitution has not provided for proportionate representation, and as long as that provision is not made the present state of things must continue.

176. Sir Hari Singh Gour : You are afraid, Mr. Naidu, and you would like to have Europeans to safeguard the interests of the non-Brahmins ?—Yes.

177. Do you think that the interests of the non-Brahmins are safeguarded by the Europeans in this province ?—Well, my party is confining its proposals to this province. We have nothing to do with the other provinces. The conditions of this province are, as I told you, that there is one community that is busy exploiting the remaining communities by means, of course, of its industry and by intrigue.

178. You just now told us that two of the executive councillors who have been appointed by the officials here have been both Maratha Brahmins, the two Home Members, and you have said that the majority of the judges of the local court, six out of seven, were Brahmins, Maratha Brahmins. That is the doing of the European officials, is it not so ?—It is more than I can say.

179. And yet you expect them to hold the balance evenly between you and the Brahmins ?—I have not said that Europeans made these appointments.

180. Who made these appointments ? They were not made by the ministers and not by the Legislative Council.—I take it the Member in charge of Law and Order, that is the Brahmin Home Member, must have had a preponderating influence in the matter.

181. Who appointed the Home Member ? Are you not relying on a broken reed in asking for the support of Europeans who will not help you ?—Divorced from any abstract propositions and taking concrete cases, my experience is that in these warring and jarring communities an Englishman has always been found to be the man who holds the balance.

182. That is what you have been trying to contend. You said first of all that the centre of power is the Home Member, and that through the agency of the Home Member the majority of these appointments have gone to Maratha Brahmins. Therefore the centre of power being in the Home Member, the question is, who appointed the Home Member, and all the mischief that you complain of may be traced directly or indirectly to that fountain head.—Well, that is a political matter.

183. That is exactly what I want you to consider. —It is not that you do not know the history, but I beg to be excused from being drawn into that.

184. I was asking you in what way your salvation lies. When you speak of being helped in your political advancement by the European officials your past experience does not justify you in relying upon them for the necessary assistance.—What I mean is, we are being actually persecuted in everyday life by this community. Every person in the non-Brahmin party or in the backward classes who is trying to come forward is being daily persecuted by the whole group, official and non-official. In this position our safety only lies, we say, in the intervention of the Englishman.

185. But how would that prevent it ? That is exactly the point I am making. How would that prevent the exploitation of your community by the Brahmins ?—The persecution would be reduced. We will probably get a chance to advance without obstruction, without undue obstruction and without improper obstruction.

186. Has it been reduced during the nine years since the Reforms? Have you not been complaining that it has been accentuated by the Reforms? —During these nine years there have been more appointments of Maratha Brahmins and a worse situation created for us.

187. That is what I am asking you. During the last nine years, by the introduction of the Reforms, there have been more appointments on the reserved side of the Government for Maratha Brahmins through the agency of the Executive Government; and that Executive Government having influenced the large number of Maratha appointments in the reserved half of government, if the popular side of the government is abolished it will accentuate the mischief?—The popular side, so far as I can see, cannot function in this province. As the backward communities are trying to come forward the organised community with all its forces is trying to curb them and keep them down, and what will be left out of the constitution is unrepresentative members, an unstable council and an unstable ministry. That ministry will be no good.

188. We are digressing from the point. The point I am making is quite different. This is a mathematical proposition. Half the government has not improved your position. Half plus half is the whole. Therefore your position is doubly bad if you scrap the Reforms?—I do not hold the view that the Executive Government is a bad thing. What I hold is that there are few capable men in our province—and I am glad to say that we will begin with yourself—and if you have men of that sort coming to the position of executive councillors they will be able to do more good and bring in more propositions by which we can bring about the material and moral advancement of the country. Under the present circumstances your ministry is not stable for three months. That is due to clannishness and intrigue.

189. Once more we go back to the main question. How are you going to ensure that men of ability should obtain positions of responsibility if the doors are bolted and barred and there stands in front the Executive Government helping them?—I am not going to put back the hands of the clock for ages to come, but as things are at the present moment I do not see any chance as long as you have no electorate that understands the political value of the vote and as long as you have representatives that themselves do not understand the value of the political vote.

190. How shall we educate them?—By enlarging the electorate and giving them a chance to vote on a larger scale so that they will be used to the ballot box.

191. What is the value of a vote if they cannot influence the decisions of the Government?—They have stultified themselves in the last ministerial crisis.

192. You want to make your province politically conscious?—Yes.

193. Therefore you want to give the people votes?—Yes.

194. And votes are valueless without being backed by power?—Yes.

195. Therefore you want to give your people power?—Yes.

196. And that power you think will be conducive to the advancement of your community?—Yes.

197. That means you must have autonomy?—Yes.

198. Therefore you are in favour of autonomy?—I want to give my people, the representatives in the council, only advisory powers for the next ten years.

199. But that is not the value of a vote. People will say that you are converting your Legislative Councils into debating societies. Before 1919, was there not a clamour raised all over the country like that?—The Legislative Council for some time past has been a bear garden.

200. I am not at all clear that the line you have indicated will help you in the least. On the other hand, instead of helping you, it will aggravate the situation and make it worse. If you are to scrap the Reforms and go back to the pure executive form of Government, it would not in the slightest degree help you, because the reserved half of Government does not help you at all. Therefore, if the whole of the Government is reserved, it will never help you at all. You are not going to influence that Government unless you appoint a non-Brahmin Governor?—I do not agree with the proposition that the four members of the executive council by themselves really constitute the whole influencing element in the place. Until the electorate and the councils develop sufficient sense of responsibility to enable them to have a dominating voice, we have got to see exactly what the present condition is, and that condition is one of ruthless exploitation on the part of the most powerfully organised class, and so by extending the franchise I think the people will have an opportunity of learning the value of the vote within the next ten years, for which period the constitution proposed by me will run on. I think ten years is quite enough time to understand the value of the vote.

201. They are learning the value of the vote now by quarrelling among themselves, but you do not give them a chance to quarrel during the next ten years. That is how they learn, and that is a plain fact; they only learn the value of the vote by quarrelling and they in time will understand that it is a futile game to go on quarrelling?—It is no use simply quarrelling the whole time to learn nothing.

202. Sardar Shivdev Singh Uberoi: In clause 3 (4) you say: "A minimum number of appointments in all "branches of public service to be held by Europeans "should be fixed so as to ensure a sufficiently strong "British element in the services." But then you have got the recommendations of the Lee Commission that 50 per cent. should be Europeans and 50 per cent. Indians. Do you stick to that proposal, or do you differ from that?—That was not what I had in my mind. 50 per cent. is not the thing that matters to me.

203. Then how much minimum should be reserved for Europeans in the Public Services?—It may not be from the point of view of the convenience of Englishmen, but it will be from the point of view of affording protection for the backward classes who are suffering from tyranny now. If there is a particular place where the Mahratta power is strongly concentrated, then I should ask for all Europeans in that district.

204. Has your Association made any proposal regarding the minimum that should be reserved for Europeans?—I have not worked it out. I have only indicated the circumstances under which that change ought to come in. At the same time I have not calculated the details. I know that certain districts in the province do require that practically all the heads of departments should be Europeans, while there are some others where they can get on without any Europeans.

205. Lord Strathcona: How many districts do you think there are in which all the heads of department are Europeans?—It is a matter of figures; I cannot say.

206. Mr. Hartshorn: I do not understand how you propose to achieve a proportionate representation. You were saying that there should be no popular Government until you have proportionate representation, but I do not understand how you are going to accomplish that?—For instance, take the Brahmins. I divide up the population into different communities, not so much because the Brahmins want separate representation, but we want to be relieved of the nuisance. Take their case, and if they are to have two representatives in the Legislative Council, we will have to divide the province into two areas and let them compete in their respective areas.

207. But do you suggest a reservation of seats for each of the communities in proportion to their population ?—As a matter of fact I might explain to you my proposals. Though they look like reservation, I do not want any reservation as such.

208. Then how do you propose to get your proportionate representation ?—With a sort of fixation of the number. I do not want reservation in excess of the population basis. I do not want any arbitrary fixation or reservation of seats. It has got to be proportionate to the population. For instance taking the first group, the Brahmins, to be five per cent. in a certain province, I will give them five per cent seats in the Legislative Council, but how those five seats should be divided in the above area is a matter of detail. In the case of the Muhammadans for instance, it has been solved ; we know exactly how they work it.

209. Supposing you have adult suffrage in the province, what do you think will be the result ? I think at present the total voting strength of the province is about 170,000. If you have got adult suffrage, you will have something in the neighbourhood of 3,000,000. You say that if you have a qualification based on Rs120 income, that will give you practically male adult suffrage, and assuming that you had that, and there is no practical difficulty of handling so large a number of voters, you think you can build up an organisation for any communities—say, for example, for the depressed classes and the backward classes—that they would vote only for candidates drawn from their own communities in the general constituencies ?—They will come in if you will exclude Brahmins from that group.

210. I am assuming now that everybody is entitled to stand as a candidate and all male adults in the population will be entitled to vote. You think that in these circumstances, and under the present condition of affairs when the Brahmins have the educational advantage and possess the organs of publicity and influence which they can bring to bear on the electorate, you could capture a fairly good representation for the Depressed Classes ?—Yes, a fairly good representation for the Depressed Classes and a fairly genuine representation of the large mass of agriculturists and all, provided you save us from this Brahmin group.

211. You will have to save yourself from them ?—For instance, if there are two candidates standing in a constituency having 500 Brahmin votes, those 500 votes are thrown solid in favour of a candidate who is acceptable to the Brahmin and against the candidate who is not acceptable to the Brahmin. He plays havoc in the constituency with his solid vote.

212. That is at present the case where the vote is restricted, but if it were made more universal, what then ?—But why not relieve us from all these quarrels ? There will be obstruction of various kinds. * * *

Memorandum submitted by the Indian Civil Service Central Association.

The Indian Civil Service Central Association is the General Council of the Indian Civil Service Associations of the different provinces. Any provincial Association is at liberty to submit its own Memorandum to the Commission.

2. The Association considers it unnecessary to emphasise the fact that the future constitution of India and the maintenance of efficient administrative machinery are two questions which cannot be considered independently, but have an intimate bearing on each other. At the same time it recognises that the character of the administrative machinery which is, or can be made, available, is only one of many factors having a close bearing on the nature of the future constitution. The Association, while realising the possibility of the introduction of changes of such a character as to alter radically the position of the Services, considers that it would accord best with its responsibilities to confine itself to drawing attention briefly to certain points affecting the members of the Indian Civil Service which have already demanded some consideration under the existing constitution and which would probably assume much greater importance in the event of substantial alterations being made. In particular, a transfer of any large measure of authority from Parliament to Indian hands would bring into prominence certain questions of vital importance to the Service. The Association does not propose to volunteer any views as to the desirability of such a transfer nor does it suggest that any large section of Indian politicians is animated by a conscious desire to do injury to members of the Services. It acknowledges that, even among those who are most keenly opposed to the existing form of administration, there are many who are anxious to do no injustice to those whose presence they believed to be superfluous. But the All-India Services, owing to their largely European character and the extent to which they have been responsible for Government in the past, are necessarily associated with an order of things with which many of the politically minded Indians are not, and are not likely in the future to remain, satisfied, and it is likely that their opposition to this order should influence strongly their attitude to the Services generally. The Association invites an impartial study of the questions, resolutions and references relating to subjects affecting the Services, and particularly European members of the Services, in the Legislatures. It believes that such a study will go far to explain the unwillingness of many members of the Services to accept a position in which they would be more responsible to these Legislatures than they are at present, unless they are assured of an adequate measure of protection.

3. The main direction in which protection can be, and has been given hitherto, is in the matter of retiring rights. At present members of the Indian Civil Service of over 8 years service, who have not qualified for full pension, have the right to retire on terms which, if they frequently involve substantial financial loss, allow an officer who finds the conditions of his service unacceptable to terminate his employment and retire on a proportionate pension. The option so to retire had originally to be exercised before the 31st March, 1924, but the period was subsequently extended to the date on which orders are passed on the report of the present Statutory Commission. But for this extension a considerable number of officers who are still in the service would have retired in 1924.

It was represented to the Royal Commission on the Superior Civil Services in India that the right of retiring on proportionate pension should be extended indefinitely, and the Royal Commission recommended that, in the case of all future British recruits to the All-India Services, they should have the option of retiring on proportionate pension if and when the field of service for which they have been recruited is transferred, such option to remain open for one year from the date of transfer.

The Association regards it as undoubtedly in the interests of the public as well as of the Services that the right to retire on proportionate pension should be granted, or continued, to all members of the Indian Civil Service at the date on which orders are passed on the recommendation of the Commission and that this right should be continued at any rate until any further revision of the constitution. If officers are assured of the right to retire on proportionate pension in the event of the conditions of their service becoming unacceptable to them it will retain in the Service a number of valuable officers who might otherwise retire, may prevent serious deterioration in recruitment and will at the same time enable those officers to go whose service is a burden to them and who are, therefore, probably unsuited to the new conditions.

4. It is possible that the recommendations of the Commission may involve the abolition of, or the appointment of other persons to, posts that have ordinarily been held by members of the Indian Civil Service. In such event the Association would request that any recommendation having this effect should be coupled with a further recommendation that adequate compensation should be given to members of the Indian Civil Service whose prospects may be prejudicially affected by the change.

In their report on Clause 36 of the Government of India Bill of 1919, the Joint Committee observe that " The Committee think that every precaution should be taken to secure to the public servants the career in life to which they looked forward when they were recruited." The Proviso to Section 96–B (2) of the Government of India Act recites that " Every person appointed before the commencement of the Government of India Act, 1919, by the Secretary of State in Council to the Civil Service of the Crown in India shall retain all his existing or accruing rights, or shall receive such compensation for the loss of any of them as the Secretary of State in Council may consider just and equitable." It would appear that in their legal interpretation the words " existing or accruing rights " do not include the right of appointment to selection posts outside the time-scale. It is submitted that such an interpretation has the effect of stultifying this proviso and the Association cannot believe that such interpretation is in accordance with the intention of Parliament. It was represented to the Royal Commission on the Superior Services in India that, whatever may be the legal interpretation of these words, the intention of the proviso was to secure to the officers concerned their prospects of promotion to all higher posts existing at the time the Act was passed or, alternatively, to secure for them compensation for the loss of such prospects through the abolition of these appointments. The Royal Commission, in Paragraph 82 of their report, found themselves unable to lay down any general ruling on the subject, but recommended that the Secretary of State should refer such claims for compensation as they arise for consideration and report by the Public Service Commission. It is requested that on this occasion the rights of members of the Indian Civil Service in such a contingency should be clearly defined.

5. The only other matter to which the Association desires to direct the Commission's attention is the question of the security of pensions. With regard to the security of pensions generally, it is observed in the Report of the Royal Commission on the Superior Civil Services in India, dated the 27th March, 1924, that " We have found widespread anxiety with regard to the future security of pensions. We do not share this apprehension under existing circumstances, and we assume that if any statutory change is made hereafter, involving a transfer of the financial control in this regard now exercised by the Secretary of State in Council, adequate provision would at the same time be made for safeguarding Service pensions."

6. With regard to the pensions to the widows and children of deceased members of the Service secured by the Indian Civil Service Family Pension Rules, considerable apprehension has been felt by many members of the Service since the introduction of the Reforms that the security of such pensions may be endangered by the advance of responsible Government in India and the resulting relaxation of the control exercised by the Secretary of State. Excluding the portion of the Family Pension Fund for Asiatic members only, the accounts of which are separately kept, the balance at credit of the Fund as on the 31st March, 1926 (the latest figures available) was £3,003,582–17–2. This sum is entirely represented by compulsory contributions by members of the Indian Civil Service past and present.

Under the regulations at present in force no insurance fund is established. The contributions are credited and the pensions charged directly to Indian Revenues as civil receipts and charges; but, in order to adjust the rate of contribution from time to time to what is necessary to supply the pensions provided by the regulations, a separate pro-forma account is kept of all contributions levied, of all payments made and of the interest which would have been allowed upon such contributions if a mutual insurance fund had actually been established.

The Government of India (Civil Service) Act, 1925, by exempting the provision for such pensions from submission to the Indian Legislatures, allayed immediate fears and it was decided to take no further action in the matter until the next revision of the constitution. The Association desires to press upon the Commission the necessity of safeguarding the Indian Civil Service Family Pension Fund from all possible interference.

7. Similar apprehensions have also been felt by members of the Indian Civil Service with regard to the security of their own pensions. Provision for these pensions has also been exempted from submission to the Indian Legislatures by the Government of India (Civil Service) Act, 1925, but the Association requests that the security of pensions earned by members of the Indian Civil Service should also be adequately provided for in recommending any advance in responsible Government for India.

Memorandum submitted by the Indian Civil Service (Retired) Association.

I am desired by the Indian Civil Service (Retired) Association to submit the following representation for the consideration of the Statutory Commission on Indian Constitutional Reforms.

This Association, which has a membership of 262 retired Indian Civil Servants, has no wish to traverse the whole ground of political reform in India, or to attempt to devise any constitutional scheme, unless its aid is invited by the Commission. In some quarters it may be said that an Association of retired officers should confine its representation solely to the question of the security of pensions, on the narrow view that this is the only matter with which its members as functi officiis should concern themselves. But its members represent an accumulation of Indian experience and knowledge gained in all Provinces in India as well as in Indian States and in all spheres of public administration, and the Association would consider itself as having failed in its duty at a very critical period in the relations between Great Britain and India if it did not travel beyond purely personal interests.

2. The Association recognises that even if no announcement had been made in Parliament in 1917, and if no Government of India Act had been passed in 1919, it would still have been necessary to provide for the increasing association of Indians in every branch of the administration, and to gratify—as far as is compatible with the welfare of the vast masses of the population—the aspirations for an enlarged share in the government of the country which have been awakened among the educated classes in the several Provinces by the liberal policy consistently pursued by His Majesty's Government and the Government of India during a century of British rule. This policy has taken shape in the extension of the advantages of education to Indians, without distinction of class, creed, or caste, in the steady development of the resources of the country by British brains and British capital, in the establishment of various public services, such as railways, posts and telegraphs, veterinary, irrigation, agricultural, forests, co-operative societies, etc., which had no counterpart under indigenous rule, and, before and above all, in the introduction to hundreds of millions, of the benefits of ordered government and of impartial and humane administration to which the people at large, during the centuries which preceded British rule, had, with occasional intervals, been complete strangers. This policy was, and could only have been put into effect by the sympathetic co-operation and unremitting labours of successive generations of public servants from Great Britain, who instilled into their Indian subordinates, afterwards to become their colleagues, those high standards of duty which they brought with them from the West. As time passed, and as educated Indians have been trained up in these ideals of public service, it has rightly been determined to admit into the higher branches of the Services an increasing Indian personnel, and this Association recognises, not without pride, the manner in which many Indians in the Services have assimilated those high traditions of the Indian Civil Service and the other British Services, traditions which are recognised throughout the Empire and beyond it. But the Association also knows from long experience of Indian sentiment and practice that the maintenance of these high standards depends, and must for long depend, upon the continuance in these Services, in substantial numbers, of this impartial British element. The standard of public service in any country is dependent upon the influence and character of public opinion, and the character of the British Services in India has been based on the standards of British public opinion. These standards they have imported with them and imparted to their Indian colleagues and subordinates. But, with the steady elimination of the British element, the influence of British public opinion will grow ever more faint, until the British public wash their hands of the whole matter, while there is no Indian public opinion of like character to take its place. Amidst racial rivalries, conflicts of creed and caste, and the struggle of hostile sections for power and place, the British members of the great Services have occupied a position of detachment which has enabled them not only to act impartially, but to create a belief in their impartiality, and it is from popular confidence in their integrity—apart from any question of efficiency—that the British members of the Indian Services have found their main support and encouragement, in spite of all the calumnies and vilification with which a hostile Press and an ambitious Intelligentsia have continuously assailed them for so many years past. In this belief in their impartiality the British members have an advantage over their Indian colleagues, for such public opinion as exists in India has not yet learnt to rise above class considerations. The Indian Public Servant, however impartial he may wish to be, is often liable to suspicion, since he himself must belong to one or other of the classes whose interests may be in conflict. If he decides, however justly, in support of his own class, he is at once open to the charge of favouritism by all the rest, while, if his decision is against them, he is accused of being a renegade and of having been bought by his opponents. Until there springs up a genuine Indian public opinion able to think otherwise than in terms of race, caste, or creed, Indian Public Servants will suffer under this severe handicap. The example and support of the British members of the Services has hitherto helped the Indian members to maintain British traditions in the teeth of class pressure. Without that support there is bound to be a falling off in the standards of efficiency and integrity. The Association is in constant touch with the working members of their old Services and with many Indian correspondents, and from the information thus obtained, as well as from the published Governmental reports, they can assert with confidence that since the advent of reforms (dyarchy) in the Provinces those standards have already seriously declined. If this deterioration should continue, it will inevitably affect the power of the British Parliament to discharge its responsibility to the people of India; it will also have a most damaging effect on British prestige, a term not used in any Imperialistic sense, but as best interpreting the respect felt for the British Raj as a mighty and beneficent authority which has both the will to do justice and the power to enforce it. This form of prestige may be made the subject of scornful reference by men who owe their wealth, education, and status to the opportunities which British rule alone has made available to them, but it is well known to those who have spent their lives in India, that the term, rightly interpreted, explains the whole secret of the wonderful hold of the British Raj upon the minds of the diverse multitudes numbered in the Indian population. It is a precious asset of the British nation not lightly to be thrown away.

3. If British responsibility for the welfare of the Indian masses is to be fulfilled, it follows that, whatever changes in political machinery the Statutory Commission may recommend to Parliament, it is absolutely essential that the British proportion in those Services which are charged with the work of administration should be of a quantity and quality sufficient to leaven the whole mass, and insure as far as possible honest and clean administration. This British contribution will not be forthcoming unless the security offered to these Services is such as to attract to an Indian career the best men that Great Britain can supply. Some members of the Association have taken their share in the recruiting campaign of a few years back to restore the popularity of service in India; some have sent sons to the Services, and though many have had their confidence so shaken by post-reforms experience that they have not seen their way to do either, still all are at one on the necessity of conserving this British character in the Public Services in India, if that country is to be saved from falling back into the tainted Oriental atmosphere of privilege, intrigue, nepotism, and corruption from which she was lifted by many years of honest administration. There are many high-minded Indians who know this, and would sincerely deplore any such backsliding, but unaided they will be quite helpless to overcome the atmosphere into which they would find themselves sinking back. The British public may easily be deceived into accepting at their face value the easy assurances by Indian politicians of their confidence in the continued efficiency of the Services when the last British member of them has departed. But those who have a lifelong experience of the currents of Indian thought know well how futile these protestations will speedily be proved to be. They know how numerous are the weaker vessels who will inevitably fall to the temptations which will surround them. The evil consequences of the elimination of a British element from the Services are not to be measured merely by the diminution or cessation of careers in India for British youth. This might be a matter for some British concern, but could never be regarded as a valid argument against Indianisation, and it has little weight with our Association. It is in India itself that the consequences would be truly disastrous to the best interests of the people. It would mean a recrudescence of official oppression and caste domination, which even British administration has only been able to keep in check and not to eliminate. It would mean the destruction of the whole fabric of peace and order built up so laboriously by the efforts of many generations of British officers.

The prolonged supineness of the Government of India in face of the various manifestations of the Non-Co-operation Movement has entailed most serious consequences and has given grave warning of the evils attendant upon loss of confidence in the power of Government to check the forces of disorder. The many friends of the British were stupefied into a surprised and sorrowful inaction. Their enemies were triumphant and increasingly truculent. The masses watched and wondered not without some feeling of contempt, what had happened to the "Sarkar" which allowed itself to be vilely calumniated and its orders set at defiance, while the King-Emperor's uncle and the King-Emperor's heir were publicly affronted. When at last the Ali brothers and "Mahatma" Gandhi had been brought to tardy justice and firmer action taken against other prime offenders, the Non-Co-operation shibboleths lost their efficacy, the confidence of the people in the Raj began slowly to revive, although the Government has not fully recovered from the shock inflicted upon its "izzat." Indeed, recent incidents in Bengal, Madras and Bombay show that the spirit of defiance of authority is still strong and that the manifestations of lawlessness encouraged by impunity are becoming more frequent. The steady reduction of the British personnel in the administration is admittedly one of the causes of this growing lawlessness.

4. It was just as the tide was beginning to turn that the Lee Commission made its enquiry, and in 1924 it submitted its report upon the "All-India" and British-recruited Services. The Commission's recommendations for the Indianisation of the Indian Civil Service provided that, after deduction of 20 per cent. of the superior posts to be made available to the Provincial Services, the rest were to be recruited half and half from British and Indian personnel. It was calculated that this 50 per cent. in composition would be reached in 1939 in respect of the Indian Civil Service, and some ten years later in the case of the Indian Police. The actual strengths of these two Services in 1924 was 2,029 of whom, perhaps, 1,800 are British. That number will in time be reduced to 1,000 or less—650 British members of the I.C.S. and 350 of the Police, for a population of 320,000,000. In the opinion of this Association, and of many other competent authorities, these proposals touched the extreme limit of safety, and, although the Indian proportion has not yet been nearly reached, the Association believes that in every Province serious difficulty has already been felt in finding a sufficiency of European officers to meet the requirements that have arisen in the recent critical years. The effect of the Reforms has been to bring home to all classes who are in a minority, either in numbers or in educational advancement, the dangers to which they would be subjected by any further relaxation of British control. This anxiety has had its manifestations in the communal bitterness, culminating in bloodthirsty riots throughout the land, which have disturbed the peace of India and made it clearer than ever before how essential it is to the peaceful progress of that Sub-Continent that the British Government should remain in a position to fulfil its responsibilities. The Association does not suggest that, until a fair trial has been given, the proportion of posts available to Indians in these Security Services under the programme proposed by the Lee Commission should be curtailed, but it urges emphatically that no further reduction in the British share of these responsible posts should be promised or even projected. Communal antagonism has grown greater and not less during the short period that has elapsed since that programme was accepted by the Government of India, and if any further Indianisation were now to be undertaken, the recently restored confidence of these Services and the re-awakened desire of young Englishmen to enter them would be once more rudely shaken, if not completely shattered. This Association is of opinion that while each class or nation naturally desires a greater share in the loaves and fishes for itself, in so far as it cannot secure that share it infinitely prefers that it should be held by British rather than any other Indian officials. In this sense there is no demand at all for Indianisation among the people at large.

Indian nationalism is an aspiration of the intellectuals and not a reality. It is on the lips of certain politicians as a convenient euphemism for Anglophobia, but it does not exist in the hearts of the masses, who consider as foreigners all those who do not belong to their own locality. The Mahratta, the Madrasi, the Bengali, the men of Hindustan, Rajputana and the Punjab are, to the people outside their respective Provinces, just foreign races or clans. The British are only one more foreign clan, but, as they happen to be impartial and aloof from all the inter-communal intrigues and conflicts, their administration is preferred to that of the others. The correctness of this view is patent to all who have served in the country. It is seldom realised by persons whose contact with Indians is limited to those few classes who have learned the phrases and catchwords of Western democratic speech without any corresponding absorption of the spirit that inspired them.

5. In addition to their programme for Indianisation of the two Security Services, the I.C.S. and Police, the Lee Commission advised the Provincialisation of all other Services which were functioning in the "transferred" field. It was logically compelled to this course because it had no authority to criticise the effects of dyarchy or to make any suggestions which appeared to run counter to that scheme. But the Indian Civil Service, as the premier Service, has always regarded the members of these great Departmental Services as colleagues and co-operators in the great and growing field of Indian administration; and this Association regards the rapid disappearance of British personnel from such Services as Public Works, Education, Forests, Agriculture, Veterinary, Co-operative Societies, Medical and Public Health as a measure which, however theoretically consistent with political schemes and dreams, is in practice disastrous to the best interest of the Indian peoples. Nearly all of these beneficent Services are the creation of British rule; in most of them not a single British official has, it is believed, been recruited since 1924. It is impossible that in these conditions the progress and development so essential to the prosperity of India can be maintained. In effect the interests of hundreds of millions of people are being subordinated to the ambitions of a few thousands. If India were reverting to Oriental education and Oriental methods, the disappearance of the British element would be natural and necessary, but when the one hope of Indian reformers is founded on development on Western lines, it is simply suicidal to cut off the supply of men born and bred in Western methods. The actual strength of all these Services in 1924 (paragraph 6, Lee Report) was only 1,946, of whom, perhaps 1,600 were British. The British element in these Services may be materially reduced without endangering the actual peace of the country, but it cannot be eliminated without seriously imperilling its progress. Indian Ministers who privately confess the necessity of obtaining British recruits in these Services have been unable publicly to act on their own belief, through fear of the abuse and ridicule which such action would entail upon them from the Swarajist members of the Legislative Councils and the Press which these control. Few Englishmen of the calibre required for Indian Services will be tempted to embark on a permanent career which offers such doubtful attractions as service on the "transferred" side of a Provincial Government.

I.M.S.—In the opinion of this Association the I.M.S. (Civil) should be definitely included among the Security Services. This is, indeed, the practical effect of the Secretary of State's recent orders as to the composition of the Service and the posts assigned to them, but the Association learns from officers on leave that the British members of the I.M.S. have been further diminished during the interval of uncertainty that has elapsed between the Lee Commission's Report and the recent orders of the Secretary of State. Hardly any new British recruits have yet found their way to the Civil side, and the Medical charge of districts has, to an increasing extent passed to an Indian personnel. The effect of this is most disquieting to the confidence of British officers serving with their families in India, and unless the position is speedily restored, which is only possible by a definite declaration that the I.M.S. is to be reckoned as a Security Service (Mr. Montagu, we understand, regarded it as a "pivotal" Service), recruitment for the Security Services themselves will be seriously prejudiced.

Other Services.—In the other Services mentioned it is obvious, from the recent Report of the Royal Commission on Agriculture, that the Commission regard recruitment of British experts as essential to the success of the programme that they have drawn up. They may be reticent in their expressions, being, like the Lee Commission, restricted by the existing Constitution, which has made Agriculture a "transferred" subject, but their intentions are perfectly clear.

In the Public Works Department, for the irrigation developments so essential in India to-day, and also for all the Public Works of the country, a substantial proportion of British Engineers is required for the initiation of new projects, as well as for efficiency of administration and the prevention of waste. The Forests do not attract the best Indians, who dislike the hardships and isolation of the forest life. In Education, where all the higher knowledge is being imparted in English, the prevalent movement among Ministers to ban British Professors, Teachers, and Inspectors is manifestly ill-advised. "All-India" Services are required if India is to be developed and governed as a whole, and though this Association fully recognises that British personnel may be reduced in the non-Security Services, yet it is essential to efficient administration that the British proportion in these Services should continue in the future, as in the past, to enjoy the security conferred upon them by their membership of an "All-India" Service and their control by the Secretary of State. British youths will seek public service abroad if they are to serve under the final authority of a British Parliament or the Parliament of a British Dominion, but they will not be willing to subject themselves to the caprices or hostility of a Provincial Legislative Council or the Indian Legislative Assembly. We believe that this difficulty has already made itself felt in the few cases where British recruitment has been attempted, and we also understand that many British officials in the transferred departments are only awaiting the action to be taken on the report of the Commission to decide whether to retire on proportionate pension or not.

6. This Association is fully conversant with the argument that loss of efficiency is a small matter beside the "satisfaction of popular desires." This argument as applied to the Indian situation is little better than claptrap. The efficiency on which this Association lays stress, and which in the past the Government of India endeavoured to secure, is not a "Prussian" efficiency, which never existed and was never attempted by the Indian Civil Service or any other Service in India. It is simply clean and honest administration—namely, to make the best use of the resources available and to apply them honestly for the good of the country; and the so-called "popular desires" to be satisfied are not popular desires at all, but the ambitions of a few special castes, who, having in the past had a monopoly of education and civil offices are anxious to secure as many lucrative posts as possible for their own kith and kin. The Association does not argue that these ambitions are not intelligible, or even not legitimate from the point of view of the classes concerned, but only that they should be clearly recognised for what they are, and not accepted as the "demand of the Indian nation," as the classes concerned would wish the British public to think.

7. During the period of maximum unrest among the Services (1921 to 1924), great anxiety was felt, both among officers serving and those on the retired list, lest continued advances towards self-government in India should place the security of Service and Family Pensions in jeopardy, since the funds from which these are payable, though they may have a separate existence on paper as pro forma accounts, have no existence in fact, the payments being made from the Indian revenues as an ordinary annual charge upon them. The existence of this apprehension was mentioned in paragraph 83 of the Lee Commission's Report. It was felt that under the Government of India Act, 1919, the liability of Indian finances for obligations of this nature were sufficiently safeguarded. The Royal Commission wrote: "We assume that if any statutory change is made hereafter involving the transfer of the financial control in this regard now exercised by the Secretary of State in Council, adequate provision would at the same time be made for safeguarding Service Pensions." This Association feels little doubt that under existing conditions the Secretary of State would always charge himself with this duty, but, with the prospect of further constitutional changes in India, involving the reduction of the Secretary of State's powers of control, it would seem necessary that the Statutory Commission should lay special emphasis on the continued security of Service and Family Pensions. It is realised that no Parliament can bind its successors without limit of time, but it would not be sufficient merely to affirm the liability of Indian revenues to meet these charges unless means were continued enabling the liability to be enforced. If in subsequent political arrangements the control of the Secretary of State over Indian finances were to be relaxed, the enactment passed should require as a condition precedent to such relaxation a form of security for the fulfilment of these obligations which would be protected not merely from the contingency of deliberate repudiation but from the vicissitudes of a possibly inefficient Indian finance. The Services may be forgiven for feeling apprehensions on the subject, for the various Indian Legislatures, so far from showing any generous feeling towards British Public Servants, who have laboured hard for the good of the country (and without whose labours the members of these very Councils would not be occupying the position of comfortable security which they now enjoy), miss no opportunity of cutting down their allowances, of attempting to abolish the higher appointments, and generally of belittling their value to the country. Not a single one of the concessions given on the recommendation of the Lee Commission would have been granted by these Legislative bodies. The Services, so far from expecting generosity at their hands, cannot even confidently reckon upon justice, and this not because Indians are individually ungenerous people, but because in their public capacity these bodies consider it as "unpatriotic" and "inconsistent with their national self-respect" to encourage British recruiting, or to confess its indispensability to the safety of the country.

8. To sum up these representations, this Association has some doubts whether democracy in the accepted sense, either now or in any near future, can ever take root in a country so constituted as India and among peoples whose traditions are so completely incompatible with democratic ideas. The only hope of success towards a form of self-government suited to Indian conditions lies in the continued support of British guidance, control, and protection. It therfore submits:—

(i) That the scheme of Indianisation at present adopted for the two Security Services—the I.C.S. and the Police—already provides for the utmost reduction in the British contribution to these Services compatible with the continued peace, safety, and progress of India.

(ii) That the Indian Medical Service should be definitely included as one of the Security Services.

(iii) That the British proportion in the recently Provincialised Services should be a substantial one and should now and in the future continue to enjoy an "All-India" status in order to make certain that such reduced British element as is recruited should be of the strength and the standard required in the interests of the peoples of India.

(iv) That in the matter of Service and Family Pensions the present statutory control of the Secretary of State should not be relaxed without such security being previously furnished as would insure that the liability of the Indian Treasury on this behalf would be met independently of the vicissitudes of the Government of India howsoever it may be constituted in future.

In submitting this representation the Association request that an opportunity may be given at a convenient time to the representatives of the Association who have drawn it up to give oral evidence in support of what has been urged.

Memorandum submitted by the Anglo-Indian Association, London.

THE CASE OF THE DOMICILED COMMUNITY OF INDIA AS PRESENTED BY THE ANGLO-INDIAN ASSOCIATION, LONDON, TO THE INDIAN STATUTORY COMMISSION.

A MESSAGE FROM H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES TO THE DOMICILED COMMUNITY.
GIVEN AT DELHI, 23RD FEBRUARY, 1922.

"You may be confident that Great Britain and the Empire will not forget your Community, who are so united in their devotion to the King-Emperor, and who gave such unmistakeable token of attachment to the Empire by their great sacrifice in the War."

SUMMARY.

A. Status:—We accept the official pronouncement of the Under-Secretary of State for India, made in the House of Commons on the 21st December, 1925, as quoted in para. 20. We invite special attention to para. 346 of the Report on Indian Constitutional Reforms, as quoted in para. 22, with respect to the "peculiar situation" of the Anglo-Indian Community, and in particular to the concluding sentence, "THE GOVERNMENT MUST ACKNOWLEDGE, AND MUST BE GIVEN EFFECTIVE POWERS TO DISCHARGE, THE OBLIGATION TO SEE THAT THEIR INTERESTS ARE NOT PREJUDICIALLY AFFECTED." If this injunction appeared necessary to the framers of the 1919 Constitution, it is much more essential now, if any further advance in responsible government is contemplated.

B. Employment in Government Service, especially railways, telegraphs and Indian Medical Department (paragraphs 24–33). We consider there is ample evidence in the experience of the last eight years that the community require to be protected from disturbance, and safeguarded against loss of employment by reason of political pressure on the part of larger communities holding a preponderating vote in the Councils. While the community do not claim any special treatment which they have not hitherto enjoyed, they do claim that their fidelity, reliability and aptitude as Government servants, throughout the period of their existence, and their almost hereditary tenure of certain classes of posts, merit special recognition and special safeguards (vide paragraphs 29–33).

(c) Education :—(Paragraphs 34–42). Anglo-Indian schools being at the mercy of Provincial Legislatures in the matter of grants-in-aid, and being moreover scattered over the whole of India, we press for the centralization of Anglo-Indian education, with a view to ensuring greater efficiency, especially in the matter of the provision of training colleges, and the safeguarding and adjustment of grants.

(d) Representation and Protection :—(Paragraphs 51–55). Like other minority communities, we ask for communal representation as the only means by which our community can be represented adequately in the Councils. Even so, such communities are likely to be in a minority in the division lobbies, and we ask for the right of appeal by these minority communities to the Governor of the Province and/or the Viceroy, who should be given statutory powers of veto to prevent the introduction of bills, or the enactment of laws, which, in their opinion, are oppressive to any minority community.

(e) Subsidiary Recommendations :—

(i) The registration of Anglo-Indians with a view to the exclusion of all who are not bona fide members of that community (vide paragraphs 18 and 54.

(ii) The establishment of impartial Selection Boards to recruit for the various Services (paragraph 31).

(iii) The recognition of the right of all Government servants to appeal direct to the Public Services Commission and ultimately to the Viceroy and Secretary of State, in the event of failure to obtain redress from their local Government (paragraphs 32 and 48).

(iv.) The placing of Anglo-Indian schools under a special Inspector General, and the definition of educational inspection circles (paragraph 41).

(v.) An enquiry into the effect which the Reforms have had on European education in India (paragraph 39).

INTRODUCTION.

The Anglo-Indian and Domiciled European Community is one of the Minority Communities of India, and they urge that they have special claims to consideration on the ground that they are not only permanently domiciled in India, but are connected with Britain by blood, religion, language, habits, and customs, and have similar standards of living and education.

2. The Anglo-Indians number, according to the last Census Report (1921), 113,012; but, as that Report states, "the actual figures of Europeans and those of the Anglo-Indian Domiciled Community are always somewhat doubtful, owing to the tendency of the latter to return themselves as Europeans, and of the Native Christians to claim to be Anglo-Indians." After allowing for these discrepancies it is computed that the Anglo-Indian population is not less than 140,000. The Domiciled Europeans, the people of pure British blood who have settled permanently in India and thus acquired an Indian domicile, number 20,000 out of a total population of 174,057 of European derivation. Their interests are for the most part identical with those of the Anglo-Indians, with whom they freely inter-marry, and together they form one political and social unit. Thus the total number of the Domiciled Community, as these two classes are collectively known, was 160,000 in 1921, and cannot to-day (1928) be far short of 175,000.

3. Although they form a very small minority of the population of India, they nevertheless hold a more important position in the body politic of India than their numerical proportion would appear to indicate; for an overwhelming proportion of the indigenous population are, from a political standpoint, indeed "dumb millions." The Census Report of 1921 states that "like other distinct sections in India the Domiciled Community have greatly improved their communal organisations of recent years and are now represented on the Indian Legislative Councils."

4. In 1923, an Anglo-Indian Association was established in London for the purpose of promoting the interests and welfare of the Anglo-Indian and Domiciled European Community. It is affiliated to the Provincial Associations and Federations of India. Its members fall within two categories: Ordinary Members and Honorary Members. Ordinary Members are members of the community who have permanently settled in this country, but have their kith and kin in India, or members of the community who have come on leave or for purposes of study to England, and overseas members who reside in India. Honorary Members comprise persons who have held high office in India, Members of Parliament and persons both in this country and in India who evince a personal interest in the welfare of the Community, or who have rendered conspicuous service to it. The London Association, the membership of which is approximately 140, is officially recognised by the India Office, and its formation was publicly welcomed by the Under-Secretary of State for India*. Though numerically not a large body, it is mainly composed of retired officials, who, having served in almost every branch of the Services under the Government of India, and coming as they do from practically every province of India, are in a position to view communal problems from the widest and most liberal standpoints.

HISTORICAL SURVEY.

5. The fact must be emphasised that India differs materially from most of the Colonies, and that the Domiciled Community differs as materially from most of the Colonials. Those Englishmen who went to India were to a large extent of a different social class from those who went to the Colonies. The immigrants to India came as administrators, merchants, traders, writers, adventurers, soldiers, and it is largely from these that the Anglo-Indian Community has sprung. It is true that the Portuguese came to India a hundred years before the English, and introduced mixed marriages as one method of permanently settling in and Christianising India, and that other European nations cultivated trading relations with India, but, with the exception of the Portuguese, they have left no appreciable mark on India, and the comparatively few families which derive from these stocks are now merged in the Anglo-Indian race, though possibly retaining the surnames of their forefathers.

6. As the Commission has already visited India and has undoubtedly acquired information at first hand as to the origin and early history of the Domiciled Community, and as further details are readily available in *Hostages to India (H. A. Stark), it does not seem necessary to do more than refer briefly to such matters as have materially and lastingly affected the well-being of the Community. The six sub-paragraphs below deal with such of these as originated prior to 1858.

(a) The East India Company by specifically encouraging and subsidising the marriages of their European employees with Indian women (vide letter from Court of Directors to President of Madras—Appendix I.), were directly reponsible for bringing the Anglo-Indian Community into existence.

(b) In the early days of the existence of the Community, when its members could be justifiably term "half-castes," no slur attached to them on the ground of their colour or mixed parentage. Those of them whose parents were well-to-do were educated in England and returned to India in the Company's service in positions equivalent to those which had been held by their fathers. They filled every class of post, civil and military, and were not treated in any respect as being other than Europeans.

(c) But while the more well-to-do were thus able, owing entirely to private enterprise, to fill good positions and be a credit to the East India Company, the Company neglected the indigent section of the Community they had called into being. As early as 1778 the condition of this section was said to be a severe reproach, but proposals which were put forward for ameliorating it were pigeon-holed (Dr. Wilson's letter to Madras Council, dated 12th June 1778—Appendix II.).

(d) The policy of neglecting the indigent section was followed by a more deliberate policy of repressing even the well-to-do sections. On 14th March, 1786†, an order was issued preventing the orphans of the Upper Orphanage School, Calcutta, from proceeding to England to qualify for the Covenanted Services. On 19th April, 1791‡, a Standing Order was passed "that no person the son of a native Indian shall henceforth be appointed by this Court in the employment in the Civil, Military, and Marine Services of the Company." This order was extended to sworn officers of the Company's ships and published in the Calcutta Gazette of 31st May and the 14 June, 1792.

(e) In 1795, the Governor-General in Council passed a Resolution disqualifying from service in the Army, except as bandsmen, all persons not descended from Europeans on both sides. Thus ostracised they joined the services of Indian Chiefs, in whose Armies they were freely enlisted, but when the Second Mahratta War was declared, a Proclamation was issued, summoning them to return to the Company's service under penalty of being treated as traitors, vide Calcutta Gazette of 8th September, 1803. The Order was obeyed, some Anglo-Indians such as Vickers and others§ preferring death rather than fighting against England, but when the War was over, they were again discharged from the British Army, and under their Treaty Engagement, Chiefs were prohibited from employing them without the sanction of the Government.

(f) In 1822, the Supreme Court at Calcutta decided that the majority of East Indians (as they were then styled) were not British subjects, which culminated in a deputation being sent to England in 1830 to represent their grievances. Mr. Ricketts, who presented their petition, was examined by the Select Committee of both Houses of Parliament, and when the Company's Charter was renewed in 1833, some of these grievances were remedied, but recruitment for the higher posts continued to be made from England, while their ineligibility to hold Commissions in the Indian Army was not removed till 1926.

After this lapse of years little would be gained by enquiring into the reasons for these repressive measures. There is no evidence that they were the result of misconduct on the part of the Community, who had served the Company well and loyally. Sir John Malcolm, in his Political History of India, 1784-1823 (Appendix III.), not only corroborates the above statement, but gives a clear picture of the condition of the Community at the time which continued till the end of the Company's rule in 1858. As remarked by Sir Bertram Standen, in the Indian Church Aid Magazine for January, 1928, "the fate of the Anglo-Indian population has, from the first, been determined by the demands of more powerful interests connected with British enterprise in India or by the exigencies of politics. At first their utility to the East India Company insured them sympathetic treatment, and they could count on employment either in the mercantile or military services of the Company. But when it acquired political power, its services became more attractive, and it was found possible to recruit men from England for the higher posts, and the Anglo-Indians had then to content themselves with the lower posts in the Company's service"; or, as Sir William Wynn put it when introducing the Ricketts' Commission to the House of Commons in 1830, "the Governors of India first place these individuals in a state of degradation and then urge that degradation as a reason for continuing it."*

7. The transfer of India from the Company to the Crown brought to light the negligence of the former in the matter of the education of the community. Lord Canning, in 1865, found it necessary to emphasise the dangers which an uneducated community might cause and the claims which the community had on the British (Appendix IV.), while Lord Lytton, in 1879, stigmatised the situation, under which a large population of European and Eurasian children was growing up without any education at all, as "a scandal to the English name and English Government," and as amply justifying Lord Canning's warning and "constituting a great social and political danger."

8. This led to the question of education being referred to a Committee, and to the Government of India ultimately passing a resolution, dated the 8th October, 1881, setting forth the necessity of adopting special measures for the education of this class, which laboured under many disadvantages, and declaring the policy it proposed to follow in support of European education. The Committee's recommendation of a more searching system of Government inspection and control, and the introduction of grants-in-aid according to results was accepted by the Government, and later, a uniform code, based on the English and Scottish Code, was introduced for all European Schools in India. As a result of these measures European education was placed on a better footing.

9. Of the other inquiries undertaken within recent years, reference may be made to the Pauperism Committee of 1891–92, appointed by the Government of Bengal, to inquire into the indigent condition of Europeans and Eurasians in Calcutta. Apart from urging the desirability of improving the system of education, and the more generous employment of the community in Government service, railways, etc., the Committee recommended :—

(i.) The formation of an Indo-European Regiment to be recruited from orphanages and other charitable institutions.
(ii.) The establishment of a training ship.
(iii.) The better organisation of charity, notably the formation of a Charity Organisation Committee.

The Government of Bengal were prepared to accept the first recommendation, but on conditions which would have made the attempt impossible. The second recommendation was not accepted. As an alternative to the third, the re-organisation of the District Charitable Society was undertaken.

10. Lord Curzon in his address to the Community in Calcutta, on the 23rd March, 1900, said :—

" Every Viceroy from Lord Canning downwards, has gazed at the problem and has been left sympathetic, but puzzled. Some, like Lord Lytton, have tried to do something positive. Others have felt the difficulty of State intervention."

Lord Curzon, who did much to place the position of the community on a more satisfactory footing, sent a despatch to the Secretary of State for India, in which was proposed the experimental raising of an Anglo-Indian regiment in India, which the Secretary of State, for financial reasons and on grounds of subsidiary difficulties, was unable to accept.

11. In July, 1912, a general conference on the education of the Domiciled Community was held at Simla, presided over by Sir Harcourt Butler, the Education Member of the Governor-General's Council, but though important resolutions were passed, the War followed, and on its conclusion the Reforms scheme was introduced, which, as explained under the head " Disabilities," has seriously retarded further progress, and threatened the ultimate extinction of European schools unless adequate protection is extended to them.

12. In 1918–19, an exhaustive inquiry was undertaken in Calcutta into the conditions and needs of the Domiciled Community, which differed from that of 1891–92 in two important respects. In the first place, while possessing the sympathy and support of Government, it was non-official in character, and secondly, it included the whole of the community and not merely the indigent section. The report of the Committee contains many valuable and important recommendations, which, if given effect to, would greatly ameliorate the condition of the poorer classes. It appears, however, the aftermath of the war, combined with the Reforms Scheme, has precluded any action being taken at the present time on the Committee's recommendations.

13. Finally, in drawing this historical survey to a close, it is only fitting to refer to the Community's record of loyalty and devotion to duty during the period of the Great War. During the Mahratta War of 1803 and the Mutiny of 1857, the Community rendered whole-hearted assistance to the East India Company, and the year 1914 proved that the spirit of former days existed undiminished. The Anglo-Indians were the first of the many races of India to offer their services, which at first were refused, but in 1916, by a special Army Order (I.A.O. No. 203, dated 3rd April, 1916), they were permitted to be enrolled, and later, when conscription was enforced, they were the only class to whom it was applied in India.* The Anglo-Indians were employed in every branch of the fighting forces and on every front, and many distinguished themselves in the field; they officered Indian Regiments and commanded Labour Corps, those who were too old to take the field or who were refused permission owing to the exigencies of the civil administration, joined the Indian Defence Force, while many pensioners returned to work or conducted special war duties.

14. After the war, the officers and men were demobilised, and this resulted in a considerable amount of unemployment; for, while the community were fighting for the Empire, Indianisation had begun. One of the first results of this measure was an increase in the number of Indians holding Government appointments in offices, railways, the post and telegraphs, for though Anglo-Indians were by law included in the term " Indians," they were not at first deemed to fall within the scope of " Indianisation." Matters were subsequently adjusted to some extent, but the mischief had been done, and hundreds of Anglo-Indians who fought for their King and country, are, like so many of their former comrades-in-arms in England, reaping the bitter reward of unemployment.

15. The above is a brief statement of the origin of the Anglo-Indian (or, as it was formerly called, the Eurasian) Community, and the disabilities it has had to contend with. At the present time, the description of the community as " half-caste," is no longer applicable. Marriages with natives of the country ceased more than a century ago, and ever since Anglo-Indians intermarry or marry Europeans. In the case of fair-complexioned Anglo-Indians (and there are many such) there is nothing to distinguish them from pure Europeans; and if the colour prejudice, which unhappily still persists in some quarters, is discounted, it may be said that the Anglo-Indian and Domiciled European Communities are identical in all respects.

16. The main fact which emerges from this history is that the East India Company, by debarring the members of the community from access to superior posts, by stigmatising them as an inferior race, and by neglecting both their social condition and their education, retarded their natural development at an early and critical period of their existence, thereby preventing them from becoming, as in their early days they showed every promise of becoming, the powerful support and mainstay of our Empire in the East. It is claimed that even under the governance of the Crown, they have not had full opportunity to recover their lost ground, and it is mainly on these counts that the community feels it has a strong case for protection in order that it may develop as even the smallest nation has the inherent right to develop.

STATUS.

17. The Rules made under the Government of India Act, 1919, contain the following definitions :—

(a) An Anglo-Indian means any person being a British subject and resident in British India,
(i.) Of European descent in the male line who is not a European.
or (ii.) Of mixed Asiatic and non-Asiatic descent, whose father, grandfather, or more remote ancestor in the male line was born in the continent of Europe, Canada, Newfoundland, Australia, New Zealand, the Union of South Africa, or the United States of America, and who is not a European ;

* When introducing the Indian Defence Force Bill in the Leglislative Council on the 21st February, 1917, the Commander-in-Chief spoke of them as follows :— " The Volunteer Force in India is now some 40,000 strong, and a large proportion of its members have the makings of excellent soldiers. The potential military value of the Force is thus considerable."—(India's Contribution to the Great War, 1923.)

(b) A European means any person of European descent in the male line being a British subject and resident in British India, who either was born in or has a domicile in the United Kingdom, or in any British possession or in any State in India, or whose father was so born or has, or had, up to the date of the birth of the person in question such a domicile.

The term "Domiciled Community," may be defined as meaning persons of pure European and mixed Asiatic and Non-Asiatic descent, who are domiciled in India (provided always the non-Asiatic strain is in the male line).

18. In one respect the definition of "Anglo-Indian" is, it is considered, too elastic. It admits of a class claiming to be Anglo-Indians whose ground for such claim is extremely doubtful. A number of this class are to be found in Calcutta, Madras, and in the Native States of Southern India, where they are known as Feringis.* This term was formerly applied to Europeans, but is now applied specially to the Indian-born Portuguese. In the Census Reports† they have rightly been excluded from the Anglo-Indian population. They must be treated as Indians, unless they can establish their claims to be Anglo-Indians under a system of registration such as we advocate in para. 54 of this Memorandum.

19. Indian Christians, though not possessing any European blood, have frequently claimed to be Anglo-Indians, adopting a European surname and European garb, and possibly, though not necessarily, living in quasi-European style. Obviously, such claims cannot be admitted.

20. This brings us to the question of Status, for the above definition only applies to enfranchisement, under the Government of India Act, 1919, as well as for Census purposes. On the 21st December, 1925, in answer to a question in the House of Commons, as to the official status of the Anglo-Indian Community, the Under Secretary of State for India stated :—

> "For purposes of employment under the Government, and inclusion in schemes of Indianisation, members of the Anglo-Indian and Domiciled European Community are statutory natives of India. For purposes of education and internal security, their status in so far as it admits of definition, approximates to that of European British subjects."

Asked further if this dual description was not likely to be a danger to their status in India, and whether he could suggest anything which would safeguard the people for whom the British were responsible in India, Earl Winterton replied :—

> "No, I am afraid I cannot. The definition of this community has always been a matter of some difficulty, owing to their position ; but this classification has lasted now for some time, and I certainly cannot admit that under it Anglo-Indians or the Domiciled Community suffer any disabilities."

21. The question of the status of the community formed the subject of representation as far back as 1830, when Mr. Ricketts came to England on deputation, and was examined by the Select Committee of both Houses of Parliament. The Anglo-Indian Association of London are thankful to His Majesty's Government for the official definition of their status as announced by the Under-Secretary of State for India, and are not unmindful of the difficulties mentioned by Lord Winterton. In respect of this matter, however, it is only with regard to their claim to trial by juries consisting of Europeans or members of their own race that they desire further protection.

DISABILITIES AND SAFEGUARDS.

22. The authors of the Indian Constitutional Reforms anticipated that their proposals might affect the Anglo-Indian Community adversely, for they inserted the following safeguard in their Report, in paragraph 346 :—

> "Some reference is needed also to the case of the large Anglo-Indian or Eurasian Community which, on historic grounds, has a strong claim on the consideration of the British Government. It is not easy for them, occupying as they do an intermediate position between the races of the East and West, to win for themselves by their own unaided enterprise a secure position in the economy of India. They have been hitherto to a great extent in political and economic dependence on the Government ; and they would not be strong enough to withstand the effect of changes which omitted to take account of their peculiar situation. We think the Government must acknowledge, and must be given effective power to discharge, the obligation to see that their interests are not prejudically affected."

Moreover, under the King's Instrument of Instructions to the Governors of Provinces, which are embodied in the Rules under the Government of India Act, 1919, they are especially required and charged :—

> "To take care that due provision shall be made for the advancement and social welfare of those classes amongst the people committed to your charge, who, whether on account of the smallness of their number or their lack of educational or material advantages or from any other cause, specially rely on Our protection, and cannot as yet fully rely for their welfare upon joint political action, and that such classes shall not suffer or have cause to fear neglect or oppression."

23. But the experience of the working of the Constitutional Reforms has, in the case of the Anglo-Indian Community, clearly demonstrated that the Royal protection enjoined by the King's Instructions has not succeeded in preventing wrong and injury being done to the material interests of the Community and has engendered serious apprehension as to its future welfare. The position, indeed, became so alarming that the community felt itself compelled to send two Deputations to the Secretary of State for India—one in 1923 and the other in 1925—to represent its grievances to the British Government. The Deputations received a sympathetic hearing, and the grievances which were put forward have been under the consideration of the Government of India. Only such of these grievances as come definitely within the scope of the inquiries of the Statutory Commission are touched upon here.

24. Railways.—Lord Curzon, in one of his speeches, drew public attention to employment in the traffic, engineering and locomotive departments of the Railways as being an important, if not the most important, direction to which the community were entitled to look, in seeking careers for their children. He pointed out that in those departments there were some 1,150 posts on every thousand miles of line in India, the pay ranging from Rs.30 to Rs.400 a month, or 25,000 posts in all, for which Anglo-Indians or Eurasians were free and qualified to compete, and that they held only a small percentage of the posts.

25. The inferences to be drawn from that speech are two :—first, that thirty years ago Anglo-Indians held numerically only an insignificant position in the railway service. That they held the more responsible position may be conceded, but this was because of their approved fitness ; just as the administrative positions were manned by Englishmen because of their superior education and training. The situation has not changed materially since 1900;* on the contrary, Indianisation, though greatly accelerated after the Reforms of 1919, was already effective when Lord Curzon's statement was made, and has been steadily growing since.

* Pages 16 & 51 of Hostages to India.

† Vide para. 202 Census Report, 1911.

The second inference to be drawn from the statement, without straining its sense, is that his Lordship wished the Anglo-Indian Community to believe that railway service was specially suited to their aspirations, and that they would be welcomed in it in increasing numbers.

26. Sir George Rainey, speaking before the Assembly in New Delhi, on 25th February last, said in connection with Railways:—

> "There is to be a fair field for all, and under the conditions he hoped the Anglo-Indians would be perfectly capable of holding their own. But there were certain things which the Government could not do. There was no question of ousting Anglo-Indians from appointments actually held by them. It was well known that when members of a particular community have held a very large number of appointments in a particular service, the whole economic organisation of that community was wedded to that factor. That point the Government of India could not possibly ignore, and they would not take measures which would involve dislocation of the economic existence of an important community."

From these words, we think, we may derive the assurance that not only is the removal from the serivce of an Anglo-Indian to make an opening for an Indian prohibited, but that in filling future vacancies, of newly created appointments, the principle of Indianisation must not be worked to the disadvantage of the Anglo-Indian. Our request, therefore, is that the policy enunciated in the foregoing statement may be made so clear to all administrations as to make its infringement impossible in future.

27. It is far from our intention to contest the justice of the ruling that all appointments must be made after due consideration of the merits of the candidates, irrespective of race, religion or colour; but we may be forgiven for pointing out that merit is a wide term, involving not only theoretical ability but general aptitude and personality. Railway service eminently demands a practical bent, and this valuable asset has been inherited by the Anglo-Indian from the British side of his parentage. To support this claim, we have the words of the present Governor of Burma, Sir Charles Innes, who, on the eve of his departure for Burma, at the end of 1927, said that as Railway Member he had had a great deal to do with the Community, and held the view that it had an almost hereditary aptitude for railway work. Further, the Railway Department always attached much value to the service of the Community, because it felt it could always rely on its loyalty in a crisis, such, for instance, as a strike. We accordingly trust that when comparative merits are being assessed, these collateral assets of the Anglo-Indian community will be given adequate consideration.

28. In this connection we feel it right to point out that the present policy of nationalizing the railways in India has materially affected the situation. So long as the leading railways were under Company management, the position was analogous to that of a private employer, who appoints his staff regardless of political considerations, in what he believes to be the best interests of his business, and is not subject to outside pressure. It is significant that in the past these interests have been considered to have been best secured by the appointment of Anglo-Indians to certain responsible positions. If, owing to nationalization of the railways, appointments are in future to be influenced by political pressure, of which the debates in the Legislative Assembly give ample proof, it goes without saying that a minority community like the Anglo-Indian community requires adequate safeguards.

29. State Employment Generally. Apart altogether from the particular considerations applicable to the continued employment of members of the Community on the railways, it is submitted that there are fundamental considerations which support their petition, that their employment in other departments of the State should not be diminished. It has already been shown that they were brought into existence for the obvious purpose of serving the interests of the Chartered Company, and that among the manifold changes of policy adopted by the Company, the destiny of the Community was moulded to serve such purposes. It has been suggested that the Community now base their claim to State protection, not on their present merits, or on the service which they render to-day, and which they aspire to continue, but merely on their past history, seeking assistance in the future as a kind of compensation or reward for the merits of their ancestors. This is not the case. Their history is relevant as showing the constitutional and administrative purposes for which they may be said to be where they are; and their past service in, and for, the Government of India is relied upon as evidence that they have, throughout the period of British rule in India, faithfully discharged the duties which they were called upon to fulfil. Further, they confidently submit that those services, continuously and consistently rendered through all the changing phases of British control, have not only justified the reliance placed upon them, but have created in their minds a justifiable expectation of similar treatment and employment for the future. It is this very source of their material well-being, and their reliance upon the opportunities for service afforded by it, which have, on the one hand, led them to look mainly to the departments of State when seeking careers for their children, and, on the other hand, diverted them from other avenues of livelihood, and, in a great measure, rendered them less fit for what may be called the struggle for existence in free competition with the vast population amongst whom they live, in ordinary trading and other civic occupations.

30. It cannot be denied that they have shown peculiar aptitude for official life, and that, while they have derived from it special advantages, they have been encouraged to direct their energies in that channel. They have never taken part in any political movement, and if fresh steps in the direction of constitutional development, or of what is called "Indianisation," are to be taken at their expense, or without the safeguards on which they have hitherto, with confidence, relied, they have, for the moment, little or nothing upon which they can fall back. It is not that they are unwilling to make the necessary effort to strike out new lines for themselves, and by broadening and strengthening the education of their children, to find new careers for their posterity. But they are not, as yet, adequately equipped for meeting the changes in their fortunes, such as seem to threaten them. In this regard, they do not ask that new benefits shall be conferred; they only ask that what they have, and always have had, should not be jeopardized by any changes in the Constitution, so long as members of the community continue to perform their duties in State employment with diligence and efficiency.

31. It must be recognised that conditions in

* NOTE.—According to Lord Curzon's statement out of a total of 303,000 persons employed upon Railways in India, only 7,000 were Eurasians, while according to the Indian Railway Report for 1926-27, the total number of employees was 763,097, of whom Anglo-Indians numbered 14,079; the proportion thus remaining the same as in 1900.

India differ from those in England. The frequent transfer of officials, for one thing, militates against the steady pursuance of any line of policy which vests any large amount of discretion in individual officers, For these reasons we cannot feel confident that any general instructions in regard to recruitment for appointments will be uniformly applied in the various provinces or by successive officers in the same province We accordingly urge the appointment of impartial Selection Boards, which shall be free from political or communal bias, for recruitment for Central, Provincial and Subordinate appointments, as well as for ancillary Services. It should be the duty of such Boards to select candidates after due consideration of all their qualifications—paying due regard not only to their educational and social fitness, but also to such matters as reliability, sense of responsibility, tact, discretion, aptitude, physicial fitness and practical experience or knowledge where necessary ; and it should be a definite direction to the Boards that they should do nothing to disturb unduly or suddenly the conditions of any community which has been accustomed to resort to any particular avenues of employment.

32. Inasmuch as members of the community employed by Provincial Governments or in railway administration have sometimes felt the need of a right of appeal against decisions of the local Government, we desire that Government and other public servants belonging to the community shall be granted the right of appeal, not only to such Public Services Commission as may be created, but also a right of ultimate appeal to the Viceroy and to the Secretary of State.

33. In Great Britain there are no communal divisions, but in India the natural aptitude of certain communities to serve the State in certain capacities is fully recognised. The Indian Army is mainly drawn from the martial races of the North-West. When the Anglo-Indians asked for grants of land in the newly irrigated areas of the Punjab, they were told by the Governor that they were communally unsuited for work on the land. This Association is unable to admit the correctness of this view, since many Anglo-Indians have been zamindars for many generations, but it nevertheless, desires to draw attention to the admission of the principle of communal aptitude for certain occupations, and a striking illustration is the case of the Anglo-Indians in the railways, posts and telegraphs, subordinate medical service, customs, etc. We cannot envisage any constitution which would deprive the military authorities of the right to recruit for the fighting forces the personnel which they consider the best for the purpose required, and we ask that similar safeguards should be provided in the constitution in regard to Anglo-Indian employment in the Civil Services.

34. Education. If there is one thing more than another which is specially menaced as an outcome of the Reforms it is the education of the Domiciled Community. The distinctive character of European education has been recognised in the Rules framed under the Government of India Act. Though these Rules provide that European education shall be a " Reserved " subject under the control of a Member of Council, and not a " Transferred " subject under a Minister responsible to the elected Legislature, the grants-in-aid for the maintenance of these schools are voted for in the Provincial Council.

35. A deputation from the European Schools in India Improvement Association, composed of Englishmen, and headed by the Right Rev. Bishop Copleston, the former Metropolitan of India, waited on Lord Olivier, in May, 1923, and pleaded for a renewed assurance of the declared policy of the Indian Government to assist private enterprise by special grants to schools established in India for the children of British descent. It was pointed out that while private efforts had increased, the Indian Legislature had in some cases refused grants to meet urgent and reasonable claims, and that schools were threatened with extinction.

36. In 1922-23 the Bombay Government reduced the grants for European schools by nearly one lakh (Rs96,286), owing, it is stated, to " financial stringency," while grants for other institutions were increased, vide Bombay Ed. Report for 1922-23.

In 1924-25, a reduction of Rs99,000 was made by the Bengal Legislative Council in the Budget estimate for European schools, and had this sum not been certified by the Governor, European Primary Schools in that Province would have found themselves in a very serious position, vide India Ed. Report for 1924-25.

In 1925-26 the Central Provinces revised the grants-in-aid for European schools, which were formerly assessed at one-half of the approved expenditure and reduced them to one-third, in order to bring them on to the same basis as Indian schools, vide C.P. Ed. Report for 1925-26.

In Burma, where European education is now a " Transferred " subject, the abolition of the post of European Inspector of Schools, and the large influx of non-Europeans has resulted in the lowering of the general tone and standard of the schools, vide Burma Ed. Report for 1922-27.

The two State Scholarships which were granted, one for boys and one for girls, to enable students to proceed to England for special courses of study, have, since the introduction of the Reforms, been withdrawn by the Central Government. Again, consequent on the substitution of the Indian Defence Force for the Volunteer Force, as a War measure, the grant for Cadets was withdrawn, but although the Defence Force has now been replaced by the Auxiliary (Volunteer) Force, and most of the High Schools still maintain Cadet Corps, which may be considered the nursery of the Auxiliary Force (India's second line of defence), the Cadet grants have not been re-introduced.

37. But what causes the greatest alarm to the community is the fact that the declared policy of Government, fixing the admission of Indians to European schools at 15 per cent. of admissions, is being violated, and an ever-increasing demand is being made on Managers of European schools to admit Indians in larger numbers, a demand which is being met in practically every Province. At the Conference on the Education of the Domiciled Community in July, 1912, Sir Harcourt Butler, the Education Member, gave an assurance on behalf of Government that there was no intention to alter such limit :—

> " It is necessary to see that this percentage is not exceeded and that such schools are not invaded by children of purely Indian descent who pass themselves as Anglo-Indians."

In spite of this assurance the official reports on education show that the percentage of Indians admitted into European schools has increased in all Provinces. " If, as some urge, without sufficient consideration " (states the quinquennial report for 1917-22) " there is no restriction placed upon the admission of non-Europeans into European schools, there is a risk that in time the schools may lose their European character." Later reports show that provinces are now considering, and indeed some have already introduced, new codes to replace the former All-India Code.

38. The Domiciled Community in India are apprehensive that these measures will seriously affect, if not ultimately destroy, the British tone and character of their schools. They appeal to the Commission and to Parliament to save their schools from any action on the part of Indian politicians which would be fatal to the purpose and spirit of the European schools and which would militate against such schools equipping the Anglo-Indian community for the battle of life. In this appeal they have the full support of the whole European population in India, and in his Minute on the conclusions of the Royal Commission on the Superior Civil Services of India, Sir Reginald Craddock, a former Governor and a member of the Commission, issued the following warning :—

> " Except in Burma, European and Anglo-Indian education is under the Reserved side of Government, but the disposition of the Legislature towards it may at some time compel the Central Government to take it over. Europeans contribute very largely in proportion to their numbers to income tax and customs, namely to Central Revenues, and there would be a certain fitness if European education became the special charge of the Government of India."

39. The cost to the public funds of European education is very small (some 47 lakhs of rupees annually) compared with the cost of Indian education (more than eleven crores annually) ; but this charge upon public funds becomes even smaller when the saving to the Exchequer, through the employment of Anglo-Indians in the Auxiliary Force, is taken into consideration. It is admitted by Government* that in determining the number of British Troops to be maintained in India, the existence of the Auxiliary Force (some 36,000) is taken into consideration. That is, if the Auxiliary Force did not exist, more British Troops would have to be entertained. The annual cost of the British soldier in India is Rs2,500 per head, of the Indian soldier Rs631, and of the Anglo-Indian of the Auxiliary Force, Rs187. Assuming, for the sake of argument, that in replacing the European Auxiliary Force, the additional contingent would be made up partly of British and partly of Indian Troops, say, at the rate of one-third and two-thirds respectively, the extra cost to the Indian Exchequer would be for British Troops Rs2,77,56,000, and for Indian Troops, Rs1,06,56,000 ; or a total of Rs3,84,12,000. And this saving in the employment of British troops has been going on ever since 1860, when the European Volunteer Force was first organised. A consideration of these facts makes it appear that a much more generous support of European education from public funds could be given without injustice to the Indian taxpayer.

Moreover, many of these schools have been established and endowed by private British philanthropy, and their continued maintenance in a state of efficiency is essential to the existence of the Domiciled Community, for, in the words of the late Lord Curzon :—

> " Without efficient schools the Domiciled Community must degenerate rapidly in India."

Great Britain cannot, therefore, divest herself of this sacred responsibility. The Council of the Anglo-Indian Association, London, earnestly request that in conformity with Section 84 (a) (2) of the Government of India Act, 1919, the Royal Statutory Commission will include in their enquiry into the growth of education an investigation of the effect which the Reforms have had on European education in India.

40. In view of the public pronouncement made in the House of Commons by His Majesty's Government on the 21st December, 1925, that, for the purpose of education, the status of the Domiciled Community approximates to that of European British subjects, it behoves the British Government to protect the interests of the European schools from the damage to their efficiency and character that might result from a further advance towards self-government being granted to India. Indeed, we submit that the British Government is under a moral obligation which has been repeatedly admitted by successive Viceroys from Lord Canning downwards. We are of opinion that this object can only be achieved by making European education a Central Reserved subject, and thus placing it beyond the influence of popular legislatures and racial antagonism. Such a course has already been adopted in the case of the Royal Military School at Sanawar for the children of British soldiers.

41. Apart from the objections already urged to European education continuing to be a Provincial subject, there is the further circumstance that the Anglo-Indian schools are so scattered throughout India that they cannot be efficiently organised or systematised on a provincial basis, nor can adequate training colleges be instituted unless the whole scheme of European education is under one controlling authority. We accordingly urge that in addition to European education being made a Central Reserved subject, it be administered by a British Inspector General of European Schools in India, in direct subordination to the Member for Education, Government of India, and that the Circles of the Inspectors under him should be defined with reference to the number and importance of the European Schools to be comprised in each Circle.

42. We suggest that the amount of the grants for European education should be fixed and allotted by the Central Government, and should be capable of alteration from time to time so as not to preclude the due development of education. We do not feel that it would be within our province to suggest whether the cost should be met from Central or Provincial revenues ; but we merely remark that the Central rather than the Provincial revenues benefit from the community, whose contributions mainly take the form of income-tax, customs, and voluntary service which admits of a saving in military expenditure.

43. Indianisation. Arising out of the question of the maintenance of European schools in an efficient state, the following extract from the Educational Report for 1924-25 is instructive :—

> " There is no doubt that owing to the increasing competition of Indians for appointments which have in the past been filled by Anglo-Indians, the pupils of European schools are finding it increasingly difficult to obtain employment." *

Before the advent of the Reforms, members of the Domiciled Community were to be found in almost every department of the service of the Government of India. As explained by Lord Lytton, in his Minute of 1878 :—

> " The Anglo-Indian cannot support himself in India by working as a day-labourer, or by adopting the avocation of the native peasant."

Consequently, the Anglo-Indian was so educated as to fit him for the higher avocations of life.

44. The following statement, recently made by Sir Michael O'Dwyer, an eminent ex-Governor of an Indian Province, and an official who has spent the greater part of his life in India, bears eloquent testimony to the manner in which the Community has contributed to the civil development and well-being of India, and completely refutes the charge that the Community has received " preferential treatment " in the past :—

> " All of us who have served in India and know India, realise the great work accomplished by the Anglo-Indian Community ; we also know that in the future, given the opportunity, they will play a great part. In the turmoils of political strife we are apt to forget the facts of history. Setting aside their military achievements and looking to the purely civil administration, you will find that most of the pioneer work in the Public Works, Railways, Medical, Posts and Telegraphs, and Inland Waterways was being done, and done well, by your Community at a time when there was nobody else to do it. In fact, if they had not been there to do it, it could not have been done at all. And shall it be said by your descendants that, having given your best at a critical time, you are now to be thrown aside like a sucked orange? I think it would be a most unworthy return for what you have done, and are still prepared to do, for India. In every great crisis your Community has shown its worth and its loyalty to the Crown, the Flag and the Empire, even though it has sometimes received step-motherly treatment from the authorities. Speaking from my own experience, I can say I have had many of your men serving under me in responsible judicial and executive posts, as magistrates, judges, collectors. I have seen them tried high, when men's courage and capacity are taxed to the utmost, and I have never known one of them to fail."

45. Further testimony as to the services rendered by the Domiciled Community to the Indian Empire is to be found in the remarks of another distinguished administrator, Sir Reginald Craddock, who, in his Minute on the Indianisation of the Public Services (already referred to) said :—

> "The Provincial Forest Services have produced some excellent Forest Officers, many of them, it must be said, Anglo-Indians."

And again, referring to the Indian Medical Department, Sir Reginald wrote :—

> "I have seen a great deal of the work done by the officers of this department, and I can only express the hope that this valuable supply will not be neglected by Local Governments. This department affords a very useful avenue of employment for the Domiciled Community, and has supplied in the past many capable district medical officers who, to my knowledge, have won the confidence of all classes of the community and all races."

46. Notwithstanding these eulogies of faithful services rendered by the Domiciled Community in every sphere of administration, they have been the greatest sufferers by the introduction of the Reforms, as evidenced by the amount of destitution prevailing in the community in the years following the war. As already explained in paragraph 14, they were now looked upon as aliens and British, and in spite of the safeguards which the authors of the Reforms laid down, the Governors were powerless to intervene under the law as at present constituted. Most of the services in which the majority of the Domiciled Community are employed are Imperial, such as the Railways, Telegraphs, Post Office and Customs, and it is in regard to these services that there have been persistent demands by the Indian politicians for the replacement of Anglo-Indians by Indians.

47. Unemployment. To add to their difficulties, retrenchments in the Railways and other public services were effected as post-war measures of economy. The Inchcape Committee made drastic reductions in the cadre of the Indian Medical Department in obedience to the Indian Legislature's demand for economy in military expenditure. At such a critical stage, the Provincial Government could have helped by taking over such surplus officers, but the Provincial Councils were remorseless, and decreed that no further admission of Indian Medical Department Officers into Civil employment would be allowed, and here again the Central Government were powerless to intervene, since Medical, under the Reforms, was made a "Transferred Provincial" subject. That the retrenchments in the Indian Medical Department were, to a large extent, unnecessary, is borne out by the fact that a number of discharged officers have been re-employed, which forces one to believe that whenever there is a cry for retrenchment or Indianisation, the Anglo-Indian Community are always the first sufferers. Indeed, the history of India proves that their interests have not infrequently been sacrificed on the altar of political expediency.

48. As further evidence of the inadequacy of existing safeguards, it may be mentioned that in 1925, in reply to a representation made by the London Association to the Secretary of State for India, on behalf of the officers of the Burma Provincial Forest Service, we were informed that as the officers of the service (mostly members of the Domiciled Community) were serving under the control of the Local Government, the Secretary of State was not prepared to entertain such representations except through the prescribed channel, to which they had already had recourse, but had failed to obtain redress. Thus, when a Provincial Government fails to remove a grievance or undo an injustice, there appears to be no higher tribunal to which the unfortunate officers concerned can look for redress, as they were able to do in the pre-Reform days.

49. We feel that the above recital of hardships and inequalities of treatment under the changed conditions now prevailing in India, will satisfy the Members of the Statutory Commission that reasonable and just grounds exist for the protection of minorities, such as the Anglo-Indian Community, whose economic position, as a result of the introduction of the Reforms, has been graphically described in the latest official Report "India in 1925–26" in the following terms :—

> "For Anglo-Indians, the contraction of one of their great—possibly their greatest—sphere of employment in the Indian Railways, and the Government service generally, has been already noted in the discussion of European education in this country. At the present moment there is much distress among them on account of unemployment, and no feature of their circumstances causes more anxiety to the leaders of the Community than this. In most of the great cities of India, numbers of respectable Anglo-Indians are suffering distress which is rendered all the more acute when they consider the undeniably unpromising outlook of their children's future. There is, of course, no a priori solution of such a problem, but the better education of the Anglo-Indian children, and the training of them for professions, will do something to solve the problem of unemployment, and to raise their status generally."

50. The London Association commend this statement, prepared for presentation to Parliament in accordance with the requirements of the 26th section of the Government of India Act, to the serious consideration of the Members of the Royal Statutory Commission. They have only to add that in spite of its grievances and disabilities, the Community has remained loyal in times of strikes and boycotts, while the crimes which usually accompany destitution and unemployment are practically unheard of.

51. Representation. The Anglo-Indian Association of London view with apprehension the possibility of further rapid Indianisation, until such time as there is evidence of a distinct improvement in the present attitude of majority communities towards minority communities. They anticipate that if under the coming régime, a further weakening of British control and an augmentation of Indian administration is granted, their Community in India will be a helpless minority, inadequately represented on the Councils, and liable to be crushed out of existence by the pressure of overwhelming numbers. Adequate communal representation, though not in itself a sufficient safeguard, is essential in order that the community may make its voice heard effectively in the Councils. In view of the multiplicity of its divergent communities, and the disparity of their respective numbers, no system of popular government other than communal is feasible in a vast country like India, with its inherent racial antagonisms, its vast social differences and its hostile religions. We submit that any attempt to introduce a form of democratic government other than by communal representation, would be most unsuitable for India, as was rightly foreseen by the authors of the Reform scheme, who came to the inevitable conclusion that "no other mode is feasible," and that "the present system must be maintained." Like the Muhammadans and Indian Christians (who number over five millions), we of the Anglo-Indian community regard separate representation and communal electorates as necessary, and in order to render its voice effective, it is essential for the community to have additional members on the Imperial Legislative Assembly and also on the Council of State.

52. It is true that, as the community have a representative on the Imperial Legislative Assembly, they are nominally in a position to voice their grievances, but his voice is one of a multitude, and, however devoted to his political work, no single individual can adequately represent the interests and needs of the community in the various provinces of India and Burma, nor can he guarantee never to be absent from the House when questions affecting the community are under discussion. It has been the experience of the past that such questions arise in the course of debate without warning and on subjects foreign to matters directly affecting the community. Nor can one representative possess the local knowledge which is sometimes essential, or be in more than casual touch with the local feeling on a particular topic. We therefore consider that each major province and group of minor provinces, if not each province, should have representatives elected by the Domiciled Community.

53. Similarly, as regards provinces, the problems of the various Services (Medical, Forests, Excise, etc.), differ, and it is necessary therefore that the community should have adequate representatives on the Provincial Councils.

54. We feel that these representatives should not be nominated but elected. In this connection reference is invited to the remarks in para. 18, about the registration of bona fide Anglo-Indians. The preparation of an electorate roll would, it is assumed, necessitate such registration, for which the Collectors of districts would be responsible. Registration of Anglo-Indians would prevent the present practice of certain members of other Indian communities posing as members of the Domiciled Community.

55. Appeals. But though adequate representation is necessary, such representation does not in itself afford sufficient safeguards for a minority community against a community which alone might be able to outvote all other communities in the Chamber. In the present state of communal rivalry in India no constitution could guarantee justice to the Anglo-Indian Community unless it provided adequate safeguards, independent of the vote of popularly-elected council. We therefore feel that the community must press for the right of appeal to which resort can be had against possible injustice, and the Viceroy and Governors should be empowered to prevent the introduction of measures and to veto laws of a discriminatory character calculated to militate against the interest of any minority community.

56. Conclusion. We have endeavoured to show that in the past, when our Community had the opportunity, it has proved an asset to the British Government. If then it be desired to improve and elevate the Community and utilise it as a source of strength to the Empire, the protective policy of the past should be maintained towards it. Otherwise there will be grave risk of its degenerating into one of the Depressed Classes of the Indian community, and becoming a source of embarrassment to the British Government.

57. The Anglo-Indian Community, in common with the European and other minority communities, has loyally endeavoured to make the Reforms a success, but this Association solemnly affirms, with all the power they can command, their belief that any scheme of responsible government which deprives India of British control would be disastrous, not only to the community, but to the British Empire as well. In the words of one of India's most distinguished Viceroys :—

> "India is the pivot of our Empire. If this Empire lost any other part of its dominion, we could survive, but if we lost India the sun of our Empire would set."

Lord Curzon at Southport in 1893 :—

> "Great Britain would be judged and remembered by the manner in which she had exercised the power, for some peculiar and inscrutable reason entrusted to her by Providence, over the many races which had become subject to her sway. It is only when you get to see and realise what India is—that she is the strength and greatness of England—that you feel that every nerve a man may strain, every energy he may put forward, cannot be devoted to a nobler purpose than keeping the cords that hold India to ourselves."

APPENDICES.

Appendix I. Extract from Despatch from the Court of Directors to the President of Madras dated the 8th April. 1687* :—

> "The marriage of our soldiers to the native women of Fort St. George, formerly recommended by you, is a matter of such consequence to posterity, that we shall be content to encourage it with some expense, and have been thinking for the future to appoint a pagoda to be paid to the mother of any child, that shall hereafter be born of any such future marriage, upon the day the child is christened, if you think this small encouragement will increase the number of such marriages."

Extract from Despatch from the Court of Directors to the President of Madras, dated the 25th January, 1688† :—

> "Induce by all means you can invent, our soldiers to marry with the native women, because it will be impossible to get ordinary young women as we have before directed, to pay their own passages, although gentlewomen sufficient do offer themselves."

Appendix II. Extract from letter from Dr. Richard Wilson, Surgeon of Trichinopoly, to Governor Rumbold and the Council of Madras, dated 12th June, 1778 :—

After describing the condition of the indigent Anglo-Indian population of Trichinopoly, Dr. Wilson suggested the following "national scheme," by which,

> "This vagrant race may be formed into an active, bold and useful body of people, strengthening the hands of Dominion, with a colony of subjects attached to the British Nation by consanguinity, religion, gratitude, and manners."

---

* India Office Records, Letter book No. 8, pp. 290 and 498.
† India Office Records, Range 240, vol. 46, p. 703. P.C.1.

Briefly Dr. Wilson's proposals were :—

> " To gather into one establishment as many of these orphans as can be collected under the age of six years ; to feed, clothe and maintain them in every respect until the 16th year ; to educate them in the Protestant religion, and to teach them reading, writing, and a few rules of arithmetic during the first eight years. The last two years to be employed in training them up to a military life and discipline, which completed, they are to be led into the field or garrison for service. Thus happily principled and properly educated, virtue fixed in their minds by precept, their constitutions improved by temperance, and their bodies robust by exercise, they will no longer remain an obscure, vagrant and miserable race ; they will assume a name ; they will become a people bound to us by ties of religion and gratitude, ever willing and able to fight the battles of their fathers, and defend the possessions of the British Nation throughout Hindustan."

Continuing, Dr. Wilson said :—

> " It has long been a severe and unanswerable reproach from the natives of this country that Britain, above all other Nations, have neglected and despised this their progeny, and perhaps we never appeared with more disadvantage in the eyes of the Foreigners than when considered in this light. In short it is to be hoped that three grand National Advantages may be drawn from the Establishment ; the more effectual and extensive propagation of the Protestant religion in India, the seed of a powerful colony sown, and a very considerable and valuable addition to our Army obtained independent of our present resources."

It is stated that Government ordered that the papers should lie on the table for consideration. No further mention, however, is made of them, and Wilson's philanthropic scheme seems to have been permanently shelved*.

Appendix III. Extract from Political History of India, by Sir John Malcolm, K.C.B., on Indian affairs during 1784-1823 :—

> " The descendants of Europeans by native mothers, usually termed half-castes or Anglo-Indians, if they do not form part of the English Community in India, are closely allied to it. Independent of those relations of blood by which may of them are united to this community, their common language, education, habits and religion, form ties which must always connect them ; but on the other hand, differences of complexion, and situation of life, separates a great proportion of this race from the English Society ; and as they are still more distinct from the native part of the population, they must be considered as forming a class of themselves. This body of our subjects in India has of late years occupied much attention of Government, both at home and abroad, and there appears an anxiety to adopt every measure which can raise it from its equivocal condition, and render it useful and respectable . . . The date at which this part of our population can arrive at any numerical strength as a separate body is very remote ; but they are almost all well educated, and have from this a consequence beyond what they derive from their numbers . . . A just and generous Government will not, however, have recourse to that narrow principle which apportions benefits by the power any class of its subjects have of enforcing them, nor will it withhold any reasonable boons, because it is offended by the temper in which they are solicited. Acting on different grounds, it will give to this, as to every other class of its subjects, that consideration which is due to their condition and which fulfils their reasonable hopes without a sacrifice of any essential interest of the Empire. Though placed under circumstances of depression and discouragement, this body of men has lost few opportunities of becoming useful and respected in the different walks of life to which their pursuits have been directed. We should continue, therefore, to cultivate their moral and religious principles, and while we institute and encourage seminaries for their instruction, upon an extended scale, we should provide the means of their future employment in the condition of life best suited to their respective situations and qualifications. If the justice of this proposition is admitted, the means of carrying it into execution will not be difficult, as they require no change in those salutary restraints in which the principles of both the civil and military services in India are now grounded. The execution of it will not impair our present, but lay the foundation of our future strength, by care which we bestow on an increasing class of our population, to render them useful and attached subjects. The real consequence of the Anglo-Indians, in the eyes of the natives and in their own, arises chiefly from their connection with Europeans. They cling to an origin which seems to exalt them, and are only driven by the rebuffs of slight or contempt to take measures by themselves as a detached body, with separate and opposite interests. The very pride they have in placing themselves in the rank of Europeans, while it makes them feel with peculiar sensibility every instance of scornful repulse which, from their anomalous situation, they must often be doomed to experience, affords the means of making them useful allies. In being so, they are in their natural situation : they are adopting the policy most beneficial to themselves, and, on the other hand, in treating them with kindness and consideration, we are only acting the part of wise and benevolent rulers ; and the policy of our extending every consideration we can to this class is greatly increased by their recognised rights of holding lands, and of sitting upon juries, which latter has been given them recently. These privileges must gradually augment the influence of this class, and by giving them importance with the English Community, and themselves, will tend to improve their condition, and confirm their attachment to the State to which they owe allegiance."

A further extract from the writer's speech, delivered at a Court of Proprietors of the East India Stock, on 9th July, 1824, shows that the community were also unable to represent their grievances in the Press. Sir John Malcolm, in referring to the difficulties a free Press in India would entail, said :—

> " But its effect on the European part of the community is a very small part of this question. Amongst the increasing part of the population called the half-castes, the sons of European fathers and native mothers, it would do infinite harm. This class must be viewed and treated as an infant society, and all the hopes we entertain of their advancement through the adoption of gradual measures for their instruction will be disappointed, if we adopt the free Press as the means of effecting that object. I have for many years given all the consideration I could to the unfavourable and depressed condition of this class. I entertain opinions (which this is not the moment to state) regarding the policy of their introduction to particular branches of the service, but I entertain no doubt as to that of every effort being made for their improvement . . . of every avenue that can be opened being opened, for the encouragement of that industry and talent which many of them possess in a very eminent degree. There are men in this class of society, whom I hold as dear as any friend I possess . . . among those, many in this Court share the regard I have for Colonel Skinner, who has so long commanded a large body of Native Horse, with honour to himself and advantage to Government. But with every desire to see this part of the population encouraged and advanced, I deem it essential for their good that their progress should be gradual in order that they may be fitted for the place they are destined to occupy in our Empire in the East." (App. VI., vol. II, ibid.)

Appendix IV. Extract from Lord Canning's Minute of 1865 :—

" If measures for educating these children are not promptly and vigorously encouraged and aided by the Government, we shall soon find ourselves embarrassed in all large towns and stations with a floating population of Indianised English, loosely brought up, and exhibiting most of the worst qualities of both races ; whilst the Eurasian population, already so numerous that the means of education offered to it are quite inadequate, will increase more rapidly than ever. I can hardly imagine a more profitless, unmanageable community than one so composed. It might be long before it would grow to what would be called a class dangerous to the State ; but very few years will make it, if neglected, a glaring reproach to the Government, and to the faith which it will, however ignorant and vicious, nominally profess. On the other hand, if cared for betimes, it will become a source of strength to British rule and usefulness to India.

" The Eurasian class have an especial claim upon us. The presence of a British Government has called them into being ; they serve the Government in many respects more efficiently than the natives can as yet serve it, and more cheaply and conveniently than Europeans can do so ; and they are a class which, while it draws little or no support from its connection with England, is without that deep root in, and hold of, the soil of India, from which our native public servants through their families and relatives, derive advantage."

SUPPLEMENTARY MEMORANDUM SUBMITTED BY THE ANGLO-INDIAN ASSOCIATION, LONDON, TO THE INDIAN STATUTORY COMMISSION.

The London Association of the Anglo-Indian Community ask leave to submit a Supplementary Memorandum, dealing with two important points which appear to have emerged during the discussion relating to their future which took place before the Commission when sitting in India.

I. ECONOMIC VERSUS CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTIONS.

2. It has been suggested that the considerations which the Community has submitted to the Commission raise economic, rather than constitutional questions. This is, undoubtedly, the case. But it is respectfully submitted that, in the solution of the problem of the future government of India, which the present Commission is now engaged in examining, with a view to making recommendations, the two questions cannot be divorced. In order to illustrate this, the London Association desires to make the following submissions :—

(a) The declaration of the British Government in August, 1917, contemplating the extended employment in State service of the people of India, and the present demand for the extension of such opportunities of service, in themselves raise economic questions.

(b) It has not been, and could not be denied that whereas, on the one hand, what has been called the Montagu-Chelmsford Report anticipated possible injury to the Anglo-Indian Community, experience has shown, on the other hand, that the constitutional changes then made have injuriously affected the economic interests of the Community by diminishing their share in State service, without providing them with any alternative. As a consequence, the economic condition of the Community has been directly injured, and they ask no more than that this injury shall be arrested by special safeguards, operating at least during the present generation.

(c) Even in the case of an unwritten constitution like that of England, instances may be recalled of constitutional questions which were in essence, purely economic. Such, for example, were some of the measures adopted by Henry VIII in his quarrel with the Pope during the Reformation, and such, also, were questions which arose between Crown and Parliament during the Stuart dynasty.

(d) It is submitted that this interdependence is even more marked in the case of written constitutions. Three instances of purely economic provisions are to be found in the most successful of all written constitutions, that of the United States of America :—

(i) The prohibition of an unequal capitation tax,

(ii) The prohibition of the imposition of duties upon inter-State exportation, were both provided in the original Constitution of the United States, while

(iii) The recent Prohibition of Liquor Law is provided by Amendment XVIII of the Constitution.

3. No difficulty ought to be experienced in drafting a provision affording protection to the Community, once the principle is accepted. The Act might contain a clause to this effect :—

During the period mentioned in the Schedule to this Act, in the departments and grades of Government service mentioned in the said Schedule the proportion borne by the number of Anglo-Indians actually employed to the total number employed in each such department or grade, shall not fall below the proportion which the number actually employed bore to the total on the 1st of January, 1929. The Secretary of State shall have power to revoke any appointment made in breach of this section to which his attention shall be drawn, and to give directions that a fresh appointment shall be made from among the applicants belonging to the said Community, and for the necessary consequential adjustments in the personnel of the department to be made. The Secretary of State shall have power, at any time, to amend the category of departments and grades contained in the Schedule.

4. Such a Schedule would contain a list of service and grades, such as Railway, Posts, Telegraph, etc., etc. The suggestion that it would be difficult, in practice, to work such a provision is met by the observation that it has never been tried, and by the provision that, in the event of it breaking down in any particular case, the Secretary of State could remove the particular department from the list. This power of amendment also meets the strange objection, which has been raised, that before the expiration of the stipulated period railways in India might be superseded by another form of locomotion.

5. Such a clause could be accompanied by the creation of an independent Board for the selection of candidates, as the Community has already submitted, the object being to secure non-political and duly proportioned appointments. Such a provision would not differ in principle from some of the recommendations made by the Lee Commission.

II. EDUCATION.

6. The Anglo-Indian Community in India, as well as their members in England, are fully conscious of the necessity of giving special attention to the education of their children with a view to meeting the diminution in State employment, and other forms of official employment, upon which they have largely depended in the past. They recognise that the standard both of the teacher and of the teaching needs to be kept at a high-level, and in places requires raising. But they submit that the standardisation of qualifications for certain classes of appointment, such as the insistence upon the qualification of a University education, may operate unequally, and become a source of hardship to the Community, and in practice exclude Anglo-Indians who are well-qualified. For while, on the one hand, the residence and social life involved in a University career are often beyond the means of Anglo-Indian youths, while they are cheaper and easier for Indians, on the other hand the facility with which degrees are granted and the imperfect knowledge of English often possessed by Indian graduates, detract from the practical value of the degree, which cannot seriously be regarded, though it is in fact required, or is going to be required, as either essential or useful for an engine-driver, a guard, a ticket-collector, or a telegraph signaller.

7. It will not be denied by anyone conversant with the conditions in India that in order to enable members of the Community to avail themselves of the opportunities of raising their general standard of education, statutory safeguards will be necessary to protect them against the attacks which it may be confidently anticipated will be made in the future, as they have been made in the past, by political parties, upon the provision made by the Government for the assistance of European Education. The members of the Community will obviously be powerless, with their small and practically impotent numerical representation, to protect themselves, in the case of such attacks, by the constitutional methods ordinarily adequate in a free constitution. This condition of affairs is not the fault of the Community, but, on the contrary, constitutes their strongest claim for special protection. The problem of affording due protection to minorities in the re-arrangement of Europe under the Versailles Treaty, is at once the most acute and pressing, and the most troublesome of those which confront the League of Nations. It has been generally recognised that toleration is the best policy. It would be strange that while, on the one hand, in answer to the claim of the community to be afforded special protection in the matter of State employment they are told that they must seek to protect themselves against gradual extinction by improving the education of their children, and by entering into free competition with other communities, the financial provision should, on the other hand, be withheld from them which alone can make a resort to this alternative even a bare possibility.

8. It is submitted by the London Association that the Community have in the past faced and endeavoured to solve the problems involved in the adequate education of their children. The claim of the Community that its members have never shirked the financial burden is a just one. They owe much to the munificence of their wealthier members and of their friends, in the past. They have borne their own share of the burden in the payment of fees to the full extent of their capacity. *It is well-known how limited this is, in view of the struggle, especially under post-war conditions, to maintain their accustomed standard of living on European lines, with their restricted pecuniary resources. They now feel that the deliberate and thorough re-organisation of "European" education, with the object of enabling the members of the Community to hold their own in the changing conditions of India is essential, but that it is beyond the means of the Community, even with the assistance hitherto given by Government, to effect this. The Conference on European Education, held at Simla, in 1912, was practically barren of results because of the Great War and the introduction of the Constitutional Reforms, which prevented the findings and recommendations of the Conference being given effect to.†

9. The letter from the Government of India, dated 11th September, 1928, in reply to the 1923 and 1925 Deputations from the Community to the Secretary of State, recognises "the vital importance . . . of improved standards of education," and states that "the Government of India propose to give their most careful attention to the important problems of education, which, if they can be solved, are likely to provide the true remedy for the dangers that at present threaten the Community."

10. The London Association appreciates that the reply to the Secretary of State was not intended to be final, and that advantage may properly be taken of the interval between such reply and the Report of the Statutory Commission, to make such additional submissions as may have become appropriate during the interval.

11. It may be observed that the above-mentioned Reply, so far as it dealt with the request that European Education should be classified as a "Central Subject," appears to be based upon the misapprehension that the request was made merely to secure the objects of (b) preserving the integrity of European schools; (c) maintaining Government grants; and (e) attaching intermediate classes to selected European schools (Vide Par. 18 of the said Reply). This is not the case, and the rejection of the request, so far as the said Reply is concerned, is based upon an entire misconception, and the whole substratum of the reasoning upon which the negative answer is based disappears. The request is based upon other considerations, as the succeeding paragraphs will show.

12. The Central administration of European education is advocated because it is believed that the organisation of the education of the Community as a whole is necessary in the interests of the Community as a whole. The standard of departmental direction, on the one hand, and an appreciation of the true measure of financial requirements on the other, are more likely to be consistent throughout the whole of British India and to be inspired by broad views when under Central control than they would be under Provincial control.

13. It was suggested to a witness who gave evidence before the Hartog Commission that such a change would place the Community, in its efforts to obtain further grants, at the mercy of a single individual. There is no substance in the suggested objection.

It might with equal force be urged against the decision of the Secretary of State, or of the Viceroy. It would have the same theoretical force when applied to the Educational Minister in each Province. If it has any force at all, the Community would prefer this risk at the headquarters of the Government of India, in the case of a single Minister, acting along a settled line of policy, and consistently with himself, to the risk of being subjected to a number of different decisions by different individuals, in different Provinces, differing probably both in principles and practice.

14. If the subject were centrally administered, the Community would not be exposed to the risk of attacks by different political enemies, in different Assemblies, attacks framed on different lines, but contemporaneously delivered, and each requiring separate defences, and separate handling by an already overworked representative, acting single-handed against an organised nimble and calculated attack. It would only have one concentrated source of attack to fear. In the case of such a small ill-organised body, unequipped for political struggles, this would be a valuable safeguard, and really a measure of bare justice.

15. The fact that a number of officers employed in State service, particularly on the railways, are frequently transferred from one province to another, is a strong argument in favour of homogeneity of administration. This applies particularly to Inspectors, Codes, and Syllabus.

16. The question of maintaining a standard of definitely religious teaching, which may not improbably become more prominent and more acute in years to come, is one which can be left with more confidence to a State Department of the Central Government, than to the discretion of a Provincial Assembly or Minister.

17. Finally, it is submitted that notwithstanding Lord Canning's impressive recognition of the need for placing European education upon a proper footing, and the subsequent introduction of Government grants in aid of European schools, the question of European education has never been thoroughly dealt with. The failure of the existing educational system to fit the Community to hold its own in India is sufficient evidence of this.

The full responsibility for school education has now been assumed by the Governments of most civilised countries, with the object of securing for each member of the community the education that will enable him to play the best part he can as a citizen. No doubt, this is not yet fully the case in India, but it is urged that the Government of India should definitely accept this responsibility in respect of the Anglo-Indian and Domiciled European Community, partly because of the history of that Community, which makes it equitable that the Government of India should do something to conserve it, partly because, from the point of view of education, it is a homogeneous community and the problem, therefore, a comparatively simple one, and partly because it is a small community, and the financial questions involved of proportionate significance. In this connection it may not be improper to remind the Commission that the proportion of the total cost of European education now borne by the Government of India is considerably less than the proportion contributed from public funds towards the cost of secondary education in England, and that the saving to the Government in military expenditure, owing to the fact that members of the Community from a preponderating proportion of the Auxiliary Force in India, is admitted.

Memorandum submitted by the All-India Kurmi-Kshatriya Association.

INTRODUCTION.

The present Reforms were inaugurated under the Government of India Act, 1919, which followed the declaration of rights contained in the King's proclamation of August 20, 1917. Gradual development of self-governing institutions with a view to progressive realisation of responsible Government in India as an integral part of British Empire and the increasing association of Indians in every branch of administration constitute the object of the said Act. The Statutory Commission has, according to its terms of reference, to inquire into the working of the system of Government, the growth of education, and the development of representative institutions in British India and matters connected therewith. It is required to report as to whether and to what extent it is desirable to establish the principle of responsible government, or to extend, modify or restrict the degree of responsible government now existing including the question whether the establishment of Second Chambers of Local Legislatures is or is not desirable. The experience of the last three elections and the working of the Reformed Constitution for nearly a decade has proved beyond doubt that the benefits of the Reformed Constitution and the franchise thereunder were not fully enjoyed by those communities which were backward in education and which in the social fabric of the country did not occupy a position to command a brotherly response from other and more advanced communities. They have not been able to take part, much less to enjoy their full share, in the increasing association of Indians in every branch of administration on account of the drawbacks noted above. It is the sad experience of these communities which makes them say, in the words of Sir Ali Imam, " that as long as we have not learnt to overcome sectarian aggressiveness, to rise above prejudices based on diversity of races, religions, languages and to alter the alarming conditions of violent intellectual disparity among the peoples of India, so long British occupation is the principal element in the progress of the country." Full responsible government cannot be realised unless and until all the different elements of society are equipped with a sense of responsibility to each other and are in a position to expect that responsibility from others. The alarming conditions of violent intellectual disparity, added to still more alarming conditions of social inequality, require special precautions to be taken in order to safeguard the jeopardised interests of the weaker by those on whom rests the ultimate responsibility for the general welfare of the country. The demands which have been formulated in this Memorandum have been formulated in the spirit, not of aggressive sectarianism to gain an upper hand on any other sister community, but in the spirit of self-protection against the undue predominance of certain more advanced communities. The desire of the Community in submitting this Memorandum is to secure for itself that protection by which it may be able to develop itself socially as well as educationally, to stand abreast with the other sister communities in the self-governing India and to enjoy its full share of the rights of citizenship in the future self-governing institutions peacefully in a spirit of brotherhood with such communities. In the present state of intellectual and social disparity a peaceful development of self-governing institutions is extremely difficult, if not impossible, and the community has a right as British subjects to expect from the British Government that its demand of justice to its claim of self-protection will not go unheeded when a reformed constitution is formulated. This Community has ever remained loyal to the British Government. The verdict of history is in its favour, for during the Mutiny it was the Madras troops, consisting largely of Kurmi-Kshatriyas, who stood fast to their colours and assisted the Government in maintaining peace. Thus it can claim fullest hearing on the important problems which His Majesty has called on the Royal Commission to study.

SECTION I. PREAMBLE.

The All-India Kurmi-Kshatriya Association, in placing before the Statutory Royal Commission appointed under the Government of India Act, 1919, its views on the problems which are within the scope of the present enquiry, feels it essential at the outset to explain the position, in general, of the Kurmi-Kshatriya Community inhabiting this vast continent of India, which it has the honour to represent and on whose behalf this Memorandum is submitted and, in particular, its own position.

This community is scattered all over the country and forms nearly one-seventeenth of the total Hindu population. They are designated as Kurmi-Kshatriyas in Northern India, and by other names in different parts of the country, such as patels, patidars, reddies, etc., and claim to belong to the Kshatriya races of the ancient Aryan stock. Kurmi-Kshatriyas can justly claim to be the prop of Indian Democracy and their importance in the political development of the country cannot be exaggerated. Almost every one of the Community was once a soldier, who, fighting in defence of his Motherland under adverse circumstances, settled down as a law-abiding and peaceful agriculturist, though he kept up the fire of his race for generations thereafter. In the dark middle ages, when India was torn ruthlessly in the North by foreign invasions and the fair fields were mercilessly devastated by rival marauders, this Community sank into political oblivion, although it seems to have retained its Kshatriya character by becoming leaders of small village communities in different parts of the country. When the political condition of the country became a little more settled during the early period of Moghal Rule, its position seems to have improved and with the rise of the Maratha power it again took part in the political activities of the country. With the advent of the British Rule, the fighting spirit of the Community found but little scope, with the result that the members of this Community were reduced to the position of mere village patels. Ever since, they have been treated more or less indifferently and the competition of other communities has kept them confined to the soil for a pretty long time.

The Kurmi-Kshatriya Community includes within its fold the following sub-communities and the strength of the population of each is noted against it :—

1.	Kurmi-Kshatriya	37,85,998
2.	Kapus	33,79,328
3.	Telangas	10,66,311
4.	Saithwar	1,23,424
5.	Patels	49,689
6.	Rajbansi	18,18,676
7.	Rawat	71,604
8.	Sindhi	8,58,054
9.	Vokkaligar	13,02,552

Throughout the country this Community has various institutions in different parts working for its amelioration. Of these, the Gujrat Patidars Association and the Mysore Vokkaligar Sangh deserve a special mention, but the All-India Kurmi-Kshatriya Association is the only organisation which can claim to be the Central body representing all units. The need of a Central Association to utilise all the forces towards a unification and nationalisation of such a vast community was felt as early as 1909, and this A.I.K.K. Association was founded. The Community stood at that time in urgent need of an organisation, as the different Associations of sub-communities mentioned above were naturally unable to cover the whole field. The chief aim of this Association is to uplift the Community socially, economically, educationally and politically. The managing body of this Association is elected annually by its members in the various provinces and contains representative men of every sub-community, among whom are many distinguished ruling Princes and the acknowledged political leaders of the country.

On account of the appalling ignorance of the masses, the Community has not been able to reap the full benefits of the political rights which have been granted to the country recently, partly for want of encouragement from the Government and mostly for the predominance of the oligarchy of the so-called advanced classes of the country. The Association has, from time to time, passed resolutions requesting the Government to recognise and protect its claims, but, unfortunately, they have not received due attention of the Government. The following are some of the resolutions passed by the Association :—

1. " That this Association of the Kurmi-Kshatriyas of All-India is strongly of opinion that the time has already come when the Government will be pleased to introduce at once a free and compulsory system of primary education in India."

2. " That this Conference humbly requests the Government to increase the number of agricultural schools and colleges in the country and to locate them in thickly populated districts attracting the students of the K.K. Community by liberal grant of scholarships."

3. " This Conference is of opinion that the exclusion of certain sections of the Kurmi-Kshatriya Community from military service casts an unmerited slur on the whole Community. It therefore prays to the Government to remove that slur by providing means for enlistment of all the sections of the Community in the British Army as regular combatants."

4. " Resolved that in spite of the pronouncement of the Government that ' Kurmis constitute a respectable community which the Government would be reluctant to exclude from Government service,' they are still somehow excluded by Government officials responsible for the appointment. Therefore, the Conference requests the Government to issue orders to Government officials not to overlook the claims of the Community and to make the necessary amendments in the rules."

5. " Resolved that this Conference urges upon the Government to continue the recruitment of the members of the Community in the military service and form entirely separate units of the community like those of Brahmins, Jats and Ahirs in order to maintain the traditional military spirit of the Community."

6. " This Conference expresses its deep sense of regret and indignation at the alarming interpretation placed upon section 51D sub-section 4 of the Oudh Rent Act, coupled with section 87 of the Land Revenue Act, in excluding this caste as a whole from the benefits conferred by the section and respectfully, but most emphatically, urges upon the United Provinces Government to issue necessary instructions to special officers in charge of record operation to recognise the claims of the Community, both as Kshatriya and advanced agriculturists in the matter of concessional and favourable rents."

7. " In the light of the experience of the present system and the results of the past eight years, this Conference is certain that unless special representation is given to the agriculturists in Councils, their rights cannot be protected. This Conference, therefore, urges upon the Government the necessity of giving separate representation to the agriculturists in proportion to their number as has been given to the zamindars, and considering such as agriculturists as pay Rs50/- to the Government as revenue and cultivate three-quarters of their land."

8. " This Association requests the Government of India to give adequate representation in Public Services to this Community, that is, to inform the Managing Committee of the Association of vacancies whenever they occur and to authorise it to certify and send candidates."

SECTION II.

SELF-GOVERNING INSTITUTIONS AND LEGISLATURES.

The electorate, being the foundation upon which responsible Government rests, calls, therefore, for primary consideration. The Association considers the Local Self-Governing Bodies as the initial training ground for the electorate and recommends that where village Panchayats are not in existence, they should be formed on the widest possible franchise with limited powers of taxation to cover the cost of village administration and that the electorate for District Boards and Municipal Bodies should be made as wide as possible with provision of power to the Local Self-Government Department to take over and administer these bodies in the event of mal-administration.

Education has spread less among the Kurmi-Kshatriya Community than amongst others. Thus the political sense of an average member of the other communities is necessarily above that of a Kurmi-Kshatriya. Further the elector of other communities possesses an innate collective sense and whatever may be his individual opinion, he follows the lead of the majority of the intelligentsia of his community who are responsible for forming the majority opinion. In the general elections which have taken place after the inauguration of the Reforms, personal influence of candidates has swayed the choice of electors. Having realised vaguely that the franchise has conferred some sort of power on him, the elector instead of using the power for the proper selection, according to the merits of a candidate seeking election, finds in it a ready instrument to turn to his profit. It is in this way that the rural area has lost rather than gained from this system. The Association suggests a careful examination of the interests represented by the present sitting members in the Provincial Legislatures and recommends reservation of seats for agricultural, landed and business interests, and labour and depressed classes strictly in proportion to their strength of population. The experience of the last three elections has made it clear beyond all doubt that the present system has given a predominating chance to the landed and commercial magnates and had put the interest of the agriculturists and labour classes at their mercy. But for the support which was given to these interests by the official block, many of the measures dangerous to such interests would have become law. Over and above the seats reserved for them they have, by their force of money and powerful influence, which they still exert over poor and illiterate tenants and labourers, secured an overwhelming majority of seats in the general electorate. It may be argued that this is due to the weakness of the people but the weakness of the people is a hard fact which cannot be removed so soon. Illiteracy and poverty which conduce to this weakness it will take considerable time for any reforms to remove from the people. Hence it is absolutely necessary that these interests should be guarded by a reservation of seats to them and specially so in the provinces where landed and commercial interest are so protected.

The hard facts and figures prove it conclusively that the reservation of seats for backward classes is very essential for their uplift all round so long as they are not brought up to the level of the so-called advanced classes. This Association, therefore, recommends that a statutory provision should be made for the reservation of seats for these classes as pointed out above.

SECTION III.

PUBLIC SERVICES AND DISCRIMINATORY LEGISLATION.

The Kurmi-Kshatriya Community numbers about one crore and a half as shown above. It is educationally one of the most backward communities. The chief causes of this backwardness are (1) that it has practically received no encouragement from the Government, (2) that residing as it does in the rural areas generally, it has less facilities for education than other communities, and (3) that the educated of this community on account of their social difficulties have less chances for success in life than those of the other communities.

That the community has liking for education can not be denied, inasmuch as since the very time the University Education was inaugurated in India, men of this community took advantage of it and in certain parts of the country the community has produced men who can compete with the best intellects of the country. Yet their number in the public service is almost negligible. The community has ever remained loyal to the British Government and is paying the highest revenue paid by any other agricultural community. The response, therefore, which it has received as yet from the Government in the matter of public service is disappointing. With the inaguration of the Reforms in 1919, which promised an increasing association of Indians in the administration of the country, it was expected that the community would receive sufficient encouragement in this direction but all in vain and matters have not improved in the least so far as this community is concerned. This Association is, therefore, of opinion that in order to improve the social as well as the economical conditions of the community and to encourage the spirit of education among them, it is necessary that at least one seventeenth of the services in all branches should be reserved for the community and immediate steps should be taken to fill future vacancies in them by preferential recruitment from the community and at least one judgeship in each High Court except the Punjab should be thrown open to the community.

There are discriminatory legislations in some of the provinces as regards the assessment of land. To take an example, in the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh, the Kurmi-Kshatriya Community has to pay more land revenue than the so-called advanced communities on the ground that it itself cultivates the land. The Community has suffered much and is still suffering from such injustice. This Association is, therefore, of opinion that there should be an adequate statutory provision for any discriminatory legislation against any particular section or community in matters of taxation and that the Governor should have the power of vetoing any such law as appears to be unfairly directed against any particular section or community.

SECTION IV.

PROVINCIAL SENATES.

The Indian provinces forming the sub-continent of India are inhabited by heterogeneous races peoples and communities with different traditions and culture. These various sections of the people differ widely from one another not only educationally socially and economically, but also in many other ways. It will, therefore, take a considerably long time to mould them into one common nationality. The Provincial Legislative Councils when further popularised will be more or less ruled by the majority and undesirable laws may often be enacted.

This can be checked by giving the Governor power to veto or withhold his assent to any legislation or administrative measure which he considers to be detrimental to common interest, but this is very likely to strain the relations between the Governor and the Council, and this is not desirable. This Association, therefore, recommends the creation of Provincial Senates to have a check over popular Councils and these senates should be composed of representative men of outstanding merits taken in strict proportion to the population of all communities.

SECTION V.

GENERAL.

The present system of land tenure in most parts of India is far from satisfactory and requires to be changed radically. This Association, therefore, would recommend that in the future political organisation of India, enough provision should be made by statute for safeguards regulating the land tenure of the country and hence protecting the rights of the peasantry.

In view of the peculiar circumstances and the customs prevailing in some parts of the country, the Association feels it necessary to emphasise the fact that statutory provision should be made to give rights to citizens to the free use of the roads.

In view of the general poverty of the country, this Association thinks that primary and secondary education should be made universally free. The association has passed resolutions, from time to time, in this connection and has thereby urged on the Government its urgent necessity.

SECTION VI.

Summary of the suggestions and safeguards :—

1. Proportionate representation of the Kurmi-Kshatriyas in Legislative Councils, Legislative Assembly and the Council of State.
2. Proportionate State aid in spread of education.
3. Adequate representation of the Kurmi-Kshatriyas on all the Local Self-Governing Bodies.
4. Proportionate representation of the Kurmi-Kshatriyas in the Army and Navy.
5. Proportionate representation of the Kurmi-Kshatriyas in Public Services.
6. Appointment of one Judge in each High Court except the Punjab to give an impetus to education and social uplift of the community.

In conclusion, we trust that your Commission would give the best possible consideration to the proposals made in this Memorandum.

We wish your Commission every success.

INDIAN STATUTORY COMMISSION

INVITATION TO SUBMIT MEMORANDA

1. The Indian Statutory Commission invites the submission of written statements or memoranda, both from official and non-official sources, from representative associations, local bodies, and responsible individuals on any of the subjects which fall within the limits of the enquiry which it is about to undertake. Before the Commission returns to India in October a programme of its sittings in various centres will have to be drawn up. The written statements or memoranda now called for should be prepared and sent to the offices of the Commission as soon as possible in order that the Commission may appreciate the main issues to be raised and proposals to be urged before it hereafter and in order that it may make arrangements beforehand for the orderly conduct of its subsequent enquiry.

2. Such written statements or memoranda as are ready before the Commission leaves India on March 31st should be sent by registered post addressed to "The Indian Statutory Commission, Camp, India." After this date the Commission will maintain its own Office in India, where further memoranda will be received on its behalf. They should be sent by registered post addressed to "The Indian Statutory Commission, New Delhi Office, New Delhi," from which office they will be transmitted to the Office of the Commission in England.

3. Twelve copies of each memorandum are required in the first instance. Further copies may be called for hereafter, if the proposed Indian Committees are set up in time.

4. It is most desirable that these memoranda should be delivered to the Offices of the Commission as soon as possible, and in any event not later than June 1st next. If for any special reason particular documents cannot be delivered till later, the Commission will be glad to be informed of the circumstances and will do its best to deal with them, but the organization of the Commission's enquiry makes it essential that the written material, much of which has doubtless already been prepared, should be promptly presented.

5. The terms of reference under which the Commission is acting are as follows:—

It is "to enquire into the working of the system "of government, the growth of education, and the "development of representative institutions, in "British India, and matters connected therewith," and it is "to report as to whether and to what "extent it is desirable to establish the principle of "responsible government, or to extend, modify, or "restrict the degree of responsible government then "existing therein, including the question whether "the establishment of second chambers of the local "legislatures is or is not desirable."

6. The Commission has already had the advantage of informal interviews with important and representative bodies and deputations both at Delhi and in several Provinces, and has been much assisted by these interviews in appreciating the nature of some of the main questions which it will shortly begin to investigate.

7. The Appendix to this notice contains a list of some of these topics (though the list does not profess to be exhaustive), and written statements or memoranda are also invited on any other subject within the Commission's terms of reference. It will be understood that those who submit memoranda are not expected or required to deal with all the subjects mentioned in the Appendix but only such of them, or with such other subjects, as specially concern the case they are putting forward.

8. The Commission attaches special importance to the written material which it is now inviting, for in many cases the memorandum will speak for itself, while in other cases the Commission after considering the memorandum (with the assistance of Indian Committees if these are appointed) will intimate whether it desires to hear oral evidence in support of the memorandum and will endeavour to make the most convenient arrangements as to when and where this oral evidence shall be taken.

9. Every memorandum should be dated and signed by or on behalf of those who present it, and should give the address to which any communication from the Commission regarding it should be sent. As already stated, there will be many cases in which the memoranda submitted will themselves sufficiently convey to the Commission the views of those submitting them, but in cases in which it is desired to tender to the Commission oral evidence in support of any memorandum, the document should end with a clear statement giving the name and address of the witness who will be ready to come forward, if required, for examination and cross-examination.

10. Memoranda submitted in a representative capacity should contain a clear statement of the nature, extent and membership of the organization submitting them. When a statement is put forward on behalf of a class of persons, the Commission wishes to have a sufficient indication of the number of individuals who actually authorize it.
